A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

The First White Man In Pennsylvania and In Lancaster County.

There are probably not a half-dozen persons in this audience who can name the first white man who set his feet on the soil that to-day constitutes the great State of Pennsylvania. And yet that comparatively unknown man had one of the most remarkable, romantic, and, I regret to say, tragic careers that ever fell to the lot of explorer or discoverer in the New World or the Old.

Why, you may ask, has the name and fame of this man, called by the historian, Parkman, "the dauntless woodsman, pioneer of pioneers," not appeared long ago in all our histories and school books, to be known of all men? I will tell you. He was a Frenchman, who came to Canada, or New France, as it was called in those early times, with that noble and commanding figure and explorer, Samuel De Champlain, who made his first voyage to America in 1603—he made ten in all—founded Quebec in 1608, and, later, became Lieutenant Governor of Canada, where most of his life was spent, and where he died. With Champlain this young man of eighteen years came to America in 1608; he never returned to Europe; the rest of his days were passed among the various Indian tribes of Canada, New York,, the Lake region and Pennsylvania. Although acquainted with many Indian dialects, he spoke no European tongue save his own. He wrote no books, nothing descriptive of what he saw and did, and it is only through his connection with the French officials and explorers in Canada, his verbal recitals and the writings of Champlain and the Jesuit missionaries, Sagard, Le Caron, Brebeuf, Baillif, and others, that we learn the story of his dauntless courage, perseverance and achievements.

The facts bearing on the life, wanderings and discoveries of Etienne Brulé are not satisfactory as a whole, and, besides, are so scattered and sometimes so meagre as to leave much to be desired. Although able to write, he left no written records, never made any, so far as is known, and what is known of him is through the writings of his contemporaries and associates, especially those of that eminent voyager, commander and ruler, Samuel de Champlain. The narratives of the latter's voyages and operations in New France are our main source of information. A number of other writers, especially the Jesuit Fathers, who came in contact with him; Francis Parkman, the eminent historian; John Gilmary Shea, Charles A. Hanna, Winsor's Narrative and Critical History of America, and especially in Mr. Willshire Butterfield's sketch of Brulé's explorations may be consulted.

Of the French and Champlain it has been truly said:

"Long before the ice-coated plains of Plymouth listened to the rugged psalmody of the Puritans, the solitudes of Western New York and the stern wilderness of Lake Huron were trodden by the iron heel of the soldier and the sandaled feet of the Franciscan friars. France was the true pioneer of the great West. They who bore the fleur-de-lis were always in the van, patient, daring, indomitable, and foremost in this bright roll of forest chivalry stands the half-forgotten name of Samuel de Champlain.

"His books mark the man—all for his theme and purpose, nothing for himself. Crude in style, full of the superficial errors of carelessness and haste, rarely diffuse, often brief to a fault, they bear on every page the palpable impress of truth."¹

Early Explorations and Settlements on the Delaware River.

But let us leave our hero, if we may call him such, for a little while, and try to unravel the somewhat tangled story of the early visits of European nations to our shores for the purpose of commerce and colonization. Beyond all question, the Delaware River and its adjacent country have become among the notable places in New World history. Not the Rhine nor the Tiber has been more strenuously battled for than this great Pennsylvania river by nations eager to extend their trade and territorial conquests. Allow me to rehearse the story briefly, as it bears close relation to my main theme, and shows who first colonized or attempted to colonize the region which in after years became the Province of William Penn.

John Smith, the renowned soldier, sailor, explorer and general adventurer, landed at Jamestown, Virginia, in 1607. He made several expeditions up the Chesapeake Bay, and came within a few miles of the Pennsylvania line, but historians are pretty well agreed that he never planted foot on Pennsylvania soil. Two years later Hendrick Hudson, also an Englishman, but at that time in the service of the Dutch East India Company, sailed along the American coast and entered New York harbor; he also sailed up the Delaware Bay and river, but he, too, failed to ascend the latter far enough to reach Pennsylvania, but his discovery of the river gave the Dutch their claim to the territory on the banks of that stream. Cornelius Hendrickson, another Dutch skipper, also sailed up the Delaware as far as the mouth of the Schuylkill in 1614, it is alleged, but this claim has not been accepted by some writers. Still another Dutch sailor, Captain Cornelius Mey, sent out by the Dutch West India Company in 1623, sailed up the Delaware and built a trading post named Fort Nassau, where the city of Greencastle, N. J., now stands. He gave his name to one of the capes at the entrance of the bay. Of course, he passed along the Pennsylvania shore also and possibly landed on Pennsylvania territory, and must, after Hendrickson, be the explorer to have come within sight of our shores.

The First Permanent Settlement in Pennsylvania.

The next explorers to come along were a party of Dutchmen sent out from Holland under the auspices of David Peterson De Vries, one of the finest characters among the early explorers of the New World. He proved to be intelligent, energetic and humane. They reached the place where Lewes, Delaware, now stands, built a substantial house, or fort, defended by palisades, and began a settlement. Up to their arrival in 1631 no whitemen had made permanent settlements on the east bank of the Delaware River. The colony was called "Swanendal," or the valley of the swans. In the following year De Vries himself came over. He reached his little settlement in December, 1632. Upon his arrival at Swanendal, he found his palisaded house burned down. He says in his narrative: "I found lying here and there the skulls and bones of our peo-pie and the heads of the horses and cows which they had brought with them." There had been trouble with the natives and this had been the unfortunate result. De Vries re-established friendly relations with the Indians, and there was no further trouble with them. He proceeded up the river in his little vessel, the "Squirrel." He wintered on what is now called Tinicum Island, which is to-day part of Delaware county. This is the first absolutely authenticated settlement made by Europeans in what is now the State of Pennsylvania. In the spring of 1633 De Vries returned to Holland, having left none of his companions behind. Doubtless he had too few men with him or else feared a catastrophe similar to that which overtook the previous colonists. The Dutch continued, however, to carry on a trade on the South River, as the Delaware was then called. In a short time, however, a new Dutch commissary came down from Manhattan and purchased from the natives the land on which Philadelphia is located. Both by right of discovery, occupation and purchase, the Dutch seem to have had a good claim on the Delaware country.

Meanwhile King Charles of England had granted a patent for a district to be called "New Albion" to Sir Edward Plowden. This patent covered all the country between Lord Baltimore's province of Maryland and the Hudson river country, which was claimed, and, in fact, occupied by the Dutch on Manhattan Island and the adjacent territory. Plowden came over, remained several years, mostly in Virginia, did nothing, and went back to England without ever having settled a single soul on his "paper colony" of New Albion.

Next came an expedition which had its birth in the fertile brain of Gustavus Adolphus of Sweden, and his able minister, Alex. Oxenstierna, and was commanded by Peter Minuet. It has been called a Swedish colony, and it was one, but of the capital required to set it afloat, half was subscribed in Holland, while most of the cargo and crew came from that country, and nearly all the colonists, sixty in number, were Dutch, the rest being Swedes, Finns and Germans. The two ships composing the expedition sailed late in 1637, and entered the Delaware in March, 1638, passing up the river as far as the mouth of the Brandywine. Here a debarkation was made of all who were to remain, and the necessary buildings for their comfort and safety erected. Seeds were sown and gardens planted. The first "permanent" settlement on Pennsylvania soil was on that spot, all that had been done before by the Dutch having been destroyed or abandoned.

So much as to the early attempts at settlement within the present State of Pennsylvania. But an equally interesting chapter remains to be told of the attempts to gain and maintain complete possession of this new land of promise. The Dutch Governor of Manhattan, New York, at this time was William Kieft. Some traders informed him of what was going on in the waters of the Delaware, and he lost no time in protesting against the action of the Swedes in occupying what he claimed was Dutch territory. He declared "The whole South River in New Netherlands has been many years in our possession, and has been secured by us with forts above and below, and has been sealed with our blood, which has happened even during your (Swedes) direction of New Netherlands, and is well known to you." ² Minuet paid no attention to this protest, but proceeded to complete his fort; log houses were built, a large store of corn was procured from the natives; meat was also collected and more land purchased, the latter extending from the head of the bay to the falls of Trenton. By July, Minuet, having secured a cargo of peltries in the way of trade, sailed for home, leaving twenty-four persons in his new settlement of Christina. William Penn was not yet born when the Swedes began this settlement. It is true this colony of New Sweden did not long continue, but it marks a notable era in Pennsylvania history.³

These Swedes appear to have been more liberal in their dealings with the natives than either the Dutch at Manhattan or the English at Jamestown, and presently secured much of the trade these nations had previously carried on with the Indians.

More Troubles Among the Contending Nationalities.

In 1635, the acting Governor of Virginia, Captain West, having heard of the Dutch settlements on the Delaware, sent an agent with a few soldiers up to Fort Nassau and took it. But this news having reached Van Twiller, the Dutch Governor of Manhattan, the latter lost no time in sending down a force of soldiers, captured the intruders and sent them prisoners up to Manhattan; later, however, returning them to Virginia, where they arrived just as another English party was about starting up to their assistance.

In 1640 another English party made its appearance on the river. This time they came from the North, from the New Haven colony, which had learned of the great profits that were being made out of the fur trade with the natives. Late in 1640, a tract of land had been purchased from the Indians, who were always ready to sell land when a new purchaser came along, by Captain Nathaniel Turner, which included both sides of the Delaware at Passayunk, which is included within the present site of Philadelphia, and where a fortified trading post was built. This settlement did not disturb the Dutch much, and was abandoned within two or three years.

The Dutch at last determined to get rid of the Swedes by force of arms, and causes were soon found for open hostilities. The result was that a strong force was sent from the New Netherlands in August, 1655, which captured the Swedish forts and ended forever all Sweden's sway on the Delaware. From 1655 to 1664, a period of nine years, the Dutch remained in absolute possession.

But even then there was trouble with Lord Baltimore, the owner of the province of Maryland, who, under his patent, claimed part of the territory lying on Delaware Bay, and sent an official at the head of a small embassy to require the Dutch to vacate the disputed country. Nothing further came of it at that time.

Trouble of a more serious character once more arose when King Charles, in 1663, granted to his brother, James, the Duke of York, a patent for all the land "from the head of the Connecticut river to the source of the Hudson, and thence to the east side of Delaware Bay."⁴

That grant included every acre of land settled, occupied and claimed by the Dutch and the Swedes since the discovery of those regions by Henry Huson. It also meant war between England and the Netherlands. The Duke of York was at that time Lord High Admiral of England, and promptly sent a fleet against the Dutch possessions in America—an expedition the latter were unable to resist. On the 20th of August, 1664, the flag of New Amsterdam was lowered. The hostile ships soon appeared thereafter in the Delaware, and, after some show of resistance on the part of Fort Arnstel, that place also hauled down its flag, and all of what once had been the New Netherlands passed under English control.

But once more there came a change of ownership. War broke out in Europe between England and the Netherlands. In August, 1673, a very strong Dutch squadron appeared before New Amsterdam; resistance was in vain, and again the Dutch flag waved in triumph over the island of Manhattan and the city was once more a Dutch possession. The Delaware colony was also given up. The Dutch restoration lasted little more than a year. The war in Europe ended, and by the treaty of Westminster, 1673-4, Holland gave back to England her colonies on the North and South rivers—the Hudson and the Delaware—and to that country they remained attached until the American Revolution of 1776-83 gave them to their present owners. From the foregoing we have seen what peoples came near or into Pennsylvania waters and on her soil, and who made settlements there. Of them all we can single out no particular individual who may be entitled to that honor.

The Real Pioneer Makes His Appearance.

But I now introduce a man, a European, who, it can be shown on proof that cannot be denied or set aside, traversed our State from its present northern to its southern boundary, and then passed through the Province of Maryland, and down the Chesapeake Bay to where it mingles its waters with those of the Atlantic. That man was Etienne Brulé (Aye-tee-ane Brulay) a young Frenchman, who, as has been stated, came to New France (Canada) at the age of eighteen years, and spent the remainder of his life in Canada, New York, Pennsylvania, and the regions further westward. It is of him a great historian speaks when he calls Champlain's guide and interpreter "The Dauntless woodsman, pioneer of pioneers."⁵ Not much is known of Brulé's early life. He was born at Champigny, near Paris, about the year 1592. He came to America with Samuel Champlain. That intrepid explorer and discoverer came to New France in 1608, on his first voyage, with the supplies for the colony that was to be founded at Quebec, on the St. Lawrence. He was one of eight out of the twenty who survived the hardships and sickness that fell upon the little colony during that hard Canadian winter. Champlain had made an earlier voyage to the new world in 1603, not as commander, however, but as an explorer, to spy out the new lands, open up trade with the natives and to advance the interests of France generally. Before his return he visited Vera Cruz, the City of Mexico, and the Isthmus of Panama, where "his bold and active mind conceived the plan of a ship canal across the ⁵Francis Parkman.

Isthmus." In all Champlain made ten voyages to America, the first in 1603 and the last in 1633. He died in Canada.

As Lieutenant General of the new colony, Champlain had ample powers to carry on the work intended. He could make war and treaties with the natives as the circumstances seemed to make those steps necessary, and undertake explorations and discoveries. In short, his mission was to found a French colony and open up traffic with the Indians. He early came into contact with certain Indian tribes of Algonquin lineage who inhabited that part of New France, and especially with the Hurons, who occupied the region of Lake Simcoe and the Georgian Bay. Before leaving for France he held by special appointment a meeting with that tribe, which had long been warring with the Iroquois, or Five Nations' Confederacy. In traveling toward the appointed place of meeting, Champlain and his little party of twelve white men and sixty Indians was encountered by a band of Iroquois, when a fight ensued. A few musket shots by the white men sent the enemy about in wild dismay and the campaign for the time being was over. Champlain returned to the French settlements, but his allies had invited him to visit them at their more remote towns, and he agreed to do so.

It was at this period that Brulé appears on the scene for the first time. Champlain kept his promise and met his allies at the place agreed upon, taking with him the "young lad" Brulé. Only a part of the Indians had arrived, but, unexpectedly, another canoe load came in with the unwelcome intelligence that a portion of his allies were engaged in a desperate battle with a body of Iroquois war-rriors, who had erected some strong defenses and were making a successful resistance. The assistance and skill of Champlain prevailed, and the enemy were completely defeated. Fifteen Iroquois warriors were captured alive; the rest were either killed or drowned. Champlain was able to save only one of the captives; the rest were doomed to be tortured and killed later, and one of them was eaten.

"The Call of the Wild."

It was on this occasion that Brulé's character for the first time came to the front. "The call of the wild" came upon him, and he expressed a desire to go with the Hurons to their homes when the other Frenchmen with Champlain returned to Quebec. Champlain wisely decided to grant his request in case the Indians would take him along. A Huron chief, Iroquet by name, had taken a fancy to the young lad and agreed to receive him, care for him in the Huron country, and return him to his friends in the following year, when another meeting was to be held, meanwhile treating young Brulé as his own son. But when Iroquet made his agreement known to the other Indians they refused to ratify his bargain. They feared the boy might be harmed, sicken and die, and then they would be held responsible for his death, and the French take vengeance upon them in consequence. Champlain rose to the requirements of the situation, and called all the chiefs together. He asked them what they meant by their refusal to take the boy with them. ". 7 keeping your promise we shall become closer friends. If you do not, I will have nothing further to do with you," and more bold talk to the same effect. The boy said he would adapt himself to their way of living, to their food and wild life, and, if sickness came upon him, it should be no cause for complaint. To all this the chiefs at length replied that they would take the young boy with them, but as a pledge of good faith would send one of their brightest young men with Champlain to Europe, to learn the French language, and, upon his return, to be able to tell them all he saw and learned. Champlain agreed to the proposal, and a young Huron, named by the French Savignon, was accordingly carried away with them and taken along to France by Champlain. There was to be a meeting in the following June, when the young Frenchman and Indian were to be returned to their respective friends.

The transaction seems to show the wise forethought of Champlain. The necessity of good and trusty interpreters was one of the supreme needs of all the peoples who founded colonies in America. Where the language was imperfectly understood there was always room for misunderstandings, real or pretended. A correct knowledge of the Indian dialects could only be obtained by men, and especially young men, living for long periods of time among the natives. No man realized this more fully than Champlain. We are told that, in addition to Brulé, certain other grown-up boys or men, named Nicolet, Marsolet, Hertel and Marguerie, were also placed among different Indian tribes to acquire a correct knowledge of their several dialects, between the years 1608 and 1620. With these young men at hand, communication between the French and natives was at once accurate and easy. Had the Quaker Government of Pennsylvania early shown like wisdom, there would have been far less cause for trouble and misunderstandings with the natives. Almost the only reliable interpreter Pennsylvania had in early provincial days was John Conrad Weiser, who when a lad had lived among the Iroquois. Every historical student remembers how, upon one occasion, Shekellamy, the wise and just overlord or commissioner of the Six Nations in Pennsylvania, in his old age lamented to Weiser that the latter was now old and could not expect to live many years longer, and then there would be no one competent to take his place. It is true that some of the Indian traders at times acted as interpreters, and, while their acquaintance with the Indian languages was sufficient for purposes of barter, it was hardly adapted to meet the niceties of diplomacy, for which purpose their services were mainly required.

Upon his return from France in the following year, 1611, Champlain quietly set out to meet the Hurons, according to promise, accompanied by the young Indian hostage, Savignon. It was a joyous meeting; Brulé was welcomed with open arms by Champlain, while the same welcome was extended to the young Huron by his tribesmen. Champlain in his narrative says: "I saw also my servant, who was dressed in the costume of the savages, and had learned the Huron language very well." *

He had also acquired a knowledge of the languages spoken by the Montagnais, and other tribes near the Hurons. This knowledge was of inestimable service to Champlain.

sibly could to learn the lay of the land, the number and condition of the natives, and the possibilities for trade. He ascended the Ottawa river from its mouth to its source, a distance of 600 miles, and then crossed over to Lake Huron, being the first white man to see the waters of that great inland sea. In July of this same year, 1611, Champlain's conference with the Indians closed. Two young Frenchmen remained with the Indians, but Brulé returned with Champlain to Quebec.

During the ensuing four years, that is, from July, 1611, to July, 1615, we hear little of Brulé. All that is known is that, in accordance with Champlain's instructions, he made repeated excursions to the various Indian tribes in alliance with the French, learning all he could about the people and the country.

The Five Nations, even at that early day, were a terror to nearly all the tribes between New England and the Carolinas, and westward to the Mississippi. As Lieutenant Governor of Canada, one of Champlain's purposes was to draw as much of the fur trade as possible to Quebec and Montreal. The young men he sent among the different tribes were instructed to encourage this trade in every way. Upon his return from France in 1615, Champlain found an immense concourse of Indians upon the site of the present city of Montreal on their annual trading visit, their canoes laden with the furs secured during the winter. All these Indians were enemies of the Five Nations and in close alliance with the French. They proposed to him a general campaign against that formidable Confederacy, and especially against the Onondagoes, one of the principal members of the Federation. They proposed to assemble a force of 1,500 warriors and make the attack on one of the strongly fortified towns of the Iroquois, despite the fact that, to reach the desired place of attack, involved in the going and coming a march of 1,500 miles, by river and lake, through tangled forests and dreary wastes of swamps, with a motley aggregation of savages who had no adequate supplies for such an expedition, but had to be fed by the chance proceeds of hunting and fishing; the stout heart of Champlain entered into the enterprise.¹

On July 9, 1615, Champlain set out for the place of rendezvous accompanied by only two white men and ten Indians. Of course, one of these whites was the trusted interpreter, Brulé, who was at that time receiving 100 pistoles, something less than $200, per annum for his services.² All the allies having assembled, and all else being in readiness, the army was about to set out on its roundabout march. How many persons composed it Champlain does not say, but the Frenchmen numbered only ten men. At this moment, however, came the news that another tribe with whom the Five Nations were also at war had decided to join the expedition with 500 warriors. The matter had already been discussed at Montreal, and Brulé and twelve Hurons had set out for their country to complete all the necessary arrangements and hurry these 500 to the scene of action by a fixed time. Brulé had been successful, and the tidings now received to the effect that the Carantonnais, such was the name of the distant tribe of would-be allies, would join the main force at the Onondagoes' town on the fixed day and take part in the attack.

Champlain and his forces reached the Onondago stronghold on October 10, 1615. "The village was enclosed by four good palisades, which were made of great pieces of wood, interlaced with each other with an opening of not more than half a foot between two, and which were thirty feet high, with galleries after the manner of a parapet, which they had finished with double pieces of wood that were proof against arquebus shots. Moreover, it was near a pond where the water was abundant, and was well supplied with gutters, placed between the palisades, to throw out water which they had also under cover inside in order to extinguish fire."*

Some desultory fighting occurred soon after the arrival of Champlain, but no decisive action took place, as the arrival of the 500 auxiliaries with Brulé was awaited. But the Indians with Champlain, ever impatient of delay at the approach of battle, at length began an assault, which was repulsed. The Indians were disheartened, but under Champlain's directions another attack was made on the place, which was also unsuccessful. Champlain himself received two wounds. The non-arrival of Brulé, with his 500 Carantonnais warriors, so disheartened Champlain's forces that a retreat was decided upon and successfully carried out. But how about Brulé and his 500 warriors from the far away Carantonnais? They got away as soon as they possibly could, but were unfortunately delayed along the way and reached the scene of conflict at the Onondago town two days after Champlain and his Huron allies had retired. There was nothing else left for them with their inferior force to do but retire also to their own country. Of course, Brulé had to return with them. He was then a long distance from Canada with the fierce Iroquois between, and no immediate prospect of getting back to Quebec. He made up his mind to make the best he could out of his unfortunate situation and spend the winter of 1615-16 with his Indian friends in their palisaded town of Carantonan, their principal village.¹⁰

The Carantonnais were Susquehannocks, located on the Upper Susquehanna.¹¹

Brulé Explores the Susquehanna Country.

Brulé was not the kind of a man to spend a long winter idle in an Indian town. He knew his patron's anxiety to learn all about the tribes south of the country of the Dutch and the country itself. He was now many hundred miles south of Quebec and in a region wholly unknown to white men. He was in the neighborhood of the Upper Susquehanna, and, in getting there, had traversed a part of New York no white man had ever seen before. He had heard his Indian friends often tell of a great river that ran southward, and he determined to explore it, and the various tribes of natives along the valleys drained by it.

¹¹"The fortified town of Carantonnais was the largest of the three towns of the Carantonnais, and its exact site has been identified as located near or on the top of what is now called Spanish Hill, in Athen township, Bradford county, Pa., about five or six miles north of Tioga Point, the junction of the Tioga and Susquehanna rivers."—Chas. A. Hanna's Wilderness Trail, Vol. 1, p. 31.

The Susquehanna is formed by the union of two streams, the North Branch and the West Branch. The former takes its rise in the Otsego and Schuyler lakes in New York, where it is sometimes called the Susquehanna. It runs southwestward to the great bend in Pennsylvania, returns to New York, turns to the left, and enters Bradford county in this State. The West Branch rises on the west slope of the Allegheny mountains, and its general direction is eastward, and, although nearly 250 miles long, is inferior to the North Branch. The two branches unite at Northumberland and form the Susquehanna. It is about 500 miles long. It is conceded that the village of Carantonan, the home of this allied tribe, was located somewhere on the upper waters of the Susquehanna.

As heretofore, in what still remains to tell, we are very largely compelled to rely on Champlain's own narrative of his voyages for what we know of Brulé's travels and explorations in Pennsylvania. Champlain thus relates the adventures encountered by the French interpreter during the winter, after he was compelled to return to the Carantonan village, after the disastrous attack on the Onondago fort: "Brulé made a tour along a river that flows in the direction of Florida, where there are many powerful and warlike nations, carrying on wars against each other. The climate there is very temperate, and there are a great number of animals and abundance of small game. But to traverse and reach these regions requires patience, on account of the difficulties involved in passing the extensive wastes.

"He continued his course along the river as far as the sea, also to islands and to lands near them, which are inhabited by various and populous tribes of savages, who are well disposed and love the French above all other white people. But those who know the Dutch complain severely of them, since they treat them very roughly. Among other things, he observed that the winter was very temperate, that it snowed rarely, and that when it did the snow was not a foot deep and melted immediately.

"After traversing the country and observing what was noteworthy, he returned to the village of Carantonan, in order to find an escort for returning to our own settlement (on the St. Lawrence)."

He Had No Companions.

It may be asked: Did Brule make this voyage down the valley of the Susquehanna by himself. There is no evidence that gives even a hint that he had a companion. The Indians then living in the valley of the Susquehanna, the Algonquins, were of the same linguistic family as the Iroquois to the north, with whose dialects he was quite familiar; therefore, he could have had no difficulty in making himself understood by those he met on the Susquehanna and Chesapeake Bay. Besides, the white man was not yet the obnoxious animal he became to the natives a century or more later. He was versed in Indian life through all its stages, and could take care of himself under the most adverse circumstances, as when he shown later. As his main purpose was to spy out the land, he no doubt went down on one side and came up on the other. An explorer does not return in his tracks when in search of something new. Such being the case, it seems a certainty that he must have traversed our own county of Lancaster, settling forever the question of priority of this man's claim to being the first white man in our county as well as in our State. The evidence is so convincing that all the historians whose works have been examined virtually concede him the honor. In fact, there is no denial.¹³

It may be urged that this journey may have been made in a canoe, and not overland, and that, in such case, Brulé floated down the river without having touched our county. Indeed, one writer, in speaking of the long trip from Carantonan to the waters of the ocean, speaks of it as having been made in a canoe. That view cannot be entertained for a moment. The winters then, in all probability, were as cold, if not colder, than now. The river was almost certain to be frozen over some time during the winter season, rendering progress in a canoe impossible. Then, again, there were falls and rapids and rough places in the course of the river, even as there are now. That would have required portages in many places. How could one man have made these portages with his canoe unaided? Besides, the daily food requirements of the lone pioneer demanded that he should travel overland and not on the water. The idea that the trip was made by water and not by land is wholly untenable.

He is Taken Captive.

Brulé remained for some time after his return among his friends at Carantonan, when he determined to make an effort to reach Quebec. This was about April, 1616. Five or six Carantonais volunteered to act as his escort and guides as far as the country of the Hurons. On the way they met a party of Iroquois (Senecas), who at once charged Brulé and his friends, who promptly took to flight. The guides found each other and continued their journey, but Brulé, who had kept aloof from his Indian friends in the hope of more easily escaping, found himself unable to return or go forward. For three or four days he wandered through the woods, half famished and almost hopeless, until at length he found an Indian trail which he followed, choosing rather to throw himself on the tender mercy of the Iroquois than to perish from starvation. Before long he came upon three Seneca Indians loaded with fish. He approached and shouted; they turned, and, seeing him, would have run, but he laid down his bow and arrows, his only weapons, in token of peace. Upon coming together Brulé related his plight to them, how he had not tasted food for several days. They pitied him, and he was offered the pipe of peace, and, after the smoke, he was taken to their village and feasted and made comfortable, but his arrival created a great stir, and great numbers quickly gathered to see him. He was questioned closely. Where do you come from? What brought you here? How did you happen to lose your way? Are you not one of the Adoresetong (French), who are our enemies? He knew what he was up against, and promptly began to lie. He answered all the queries that had been made to him as best he could, but was particularly anxious to make them believe he was not a Frenchman, but belonged to a better nation than the French, and who were anxious to be their friends. But the wily Iroquois saw through his subterfuges. They fell upon him, plucked out his beard, burnt him with live embers and tore out some of his fingernails with their teeth—all this against the protest of their chief.

It is very evident that all this was preliminary to the torture at the stake. Brulé was a Catholic, but we nowhere learn that he was much troubled by religious scruples. But he wore upon his breast an Agnus Dei, attached by a cord to his neck. This was seen, and an attempt was made to take it from him; he resisted and said: "If you take it and kill me, you will yourselves immediately die—you and all your kin." The day was hot, and one of those thunder gusts which often succeed the fierce heats of an American mid-summer day was rising against the sky. Brulé pointed to the inky clouds as tokens of the anger of his God. The storm broke, and as the celestial artillery boomed over the darkening forests, the Iroquois were stricken with a supernatural terror. All fled the spot, leaving their victim still bound fast, until the chief, who had endeavored to protect him, returned, cut the cords, and, leading him to his lodge, dressed his wounds. Thenceforth there was neither feast nor dance to which Brulé was not invited.²⁸ seventy-three years later, on August 6, 1777, during the hard-fought battle of Oriskany. The day had been hot and sultry. "The distant rumblings, indications of a coming storm, had not been heard amid the roar of battle. So intent were the contestants upon the struggle that they did not take notice of the thunderstorm until it broke upon them with great violence. The heavy downpour of rain, the swaying of the trees and the great darkness arrested the work of death for about an hour."¹⁴

Reaches His Friends at Last.

After several months' sojourn with these new "friends," he started for the country of his old friends, the Hurons, but before leaving the Iroquois he assured them that he would bring about better relations between them and the French and the Hurons. Of course, he was well received by the Hurons, but he learned that Champlain had returned to Quebec, having left instructions for Brulé to continue his explorations upon his return. But he seemed to be tired of his recent hard experiences, and after remaining among the Hurons many months, he concluded to return to his own countrymen on the St. Lawrence. So, in the summer of 1618, after eight years of continuous service in the wilderness, he joined his Indian friends, who were ready to make their annual trading trip to the French settlements, and on July 7 "greeted Champlain at the town of Three Rivers, after nearly a three years' absence since parting with him in the Huron country, and related the story of what he had seen of distant regions and of what he had suffered in his journeyings."¹⁵

Champlain also informed Brulé that he was about to sail for France, and assured him that he would return with ample means in men and money and would suitably reward him.

On the Shores of Lake Superior.

It has already been stated that Brulé traveled to the northwest, until he stood upon the shores of Lake Huron. But there and elsewhere he had met with Indians who had told him of a still greater sea beyond. Champlain was aware of these things, and had all along been hoping this was the great northern ocean. It was to learn the truth of these stories, and also to draw these distant natives to open trade relations with the French, that he urged Brulé to undertake this new quest. He was now accompanied by another Frenchman named Grenolle. It does not fall within the province of this paper to attempt to relate all these men saw and where they went. They traveled to the Falls of St. Mary, and presently stood where no white man had ever stood before, on the shores of Lake Superior. It was the "North Sea" the Indians had been for years telling Champlain and Brulé about, the object of their hopes, the way that was to lead to China, but alas, for these hopes, the water was fresh! A long time was passed in explorations in the vicinity, and then the return trip was made, Brulé reaching Quebec July 2, 1623.

Champlain not having returned from Europe, Brulé, that same summer, returned to the Huron country to make further discoveries. The year 1625 found Brulé among a tribe of Indians called Alliwandarons, which he had not visited before. For several years Brulé was each season passing to and fro between the French settlements and the Huron and other native tribes.

He Leaves the French Service.

Our narrative is drawing to a close. We come now to a time when the career of Brulé underwent a change. Trouble had been brewing in Europe. Hostilities broke out between France and England, owing largely to religious complications, and, as a result, in 1629 an English squadron was sent into the St. Lawrence to capture the French settlements, under the command of Captain David Kirk. He captured a large quantity of food supplies which had just arrived from France, and there was great distress and want. Parkman says: "Seven ounces of pounded peas were now the daily food of each, and at the end of May even this failed. Men, women and children betook themselves to the woods, gathering acorns and grubbing up roots. Some joined the Hurons and Algonquins; some wandered toward the Abenakis in Maine. There was scarcely one who would not have hailed the English deliverers."¹⁶

Four Frenchmen were among the number who went over to the English; they were Etienne Brulé, Nicholas Marsolt, Pierre Raye and Baillif. Thirteen others were induced to remain and live under English rule. Brulé has been censured for having aided the English vessels in ascending the river. There is a bitter assault on him in the last edition of Champlain's voyages, issued in 1632, but it is not from the hand of Champlain himself. Here are the words: "It was a very bad example to send persons of such bad morals as the interpreter Brulé among the Indians, who received a salary of one hundred pistoles a year, to urge the savages to trade with us. Such characters ought to have been severely chastised, for it was recognized the man was vicious and licentious; but what will not be the mischief wrought by the hope of gain which cometh before every consideration?" Surely Champlain could not have written that, for it condemns his own action. The place was taken; all the French prisoners who were seized were sent to England. It was a matter of living at liberty under English rule or of going as a prisoner to England. Then again for a period of twenty-one years—1608 to 1629—Brulé had served Champlain with dog-like fidelity. Most of that time he lived among savages, living like them on the products of the woods and streams. His services to France were greater than those of any other Frenchman, save Champlain himself. What was his recompense? Less than $200 annually for a few years. Besides, he was not an enlisted soldier, and when the French towns were captured he had a right to look out for himself. Were not Frenchmen of noble lineage at the same time serving in armies that were fighting those of France? The charge that he was a bad man had never before been made. We have seen that he was Champlain's most trusted agent, always reliable and to be relied upon. He simply made the best of a bad situation, and gave himself the benefit of the doubt, if he had one. Besides, there is no evidence that he rendered further assistance to the English. In a few years a treaty of peace was concluded between England and France, and New France was turned over to her founders, the French.

The closing chapter of our story has been reached. It is brief and tragic. After what had occurred, it was, of course, impossible that Brulé should seek or even desire further service under the French Government. He had now reached the age of thirty-six years, eighteen of which had been passed almost exclusively among the Indians. To all intents and purposes he had become like one of them. It was only a few months which he from time to time spent in Quebec and other French towns. He was as fully qualified to spend a month or a year in the wilderness as any living man, red or white, between the St. Lawrence and the Delaware.

His Tragic Fate.

He took up a residence among his life-long associates, the Hurons, in their village of Toanche, the exact locality of which has not been determined, but which seems to have been his favorite resort when with the savages. Here he was barbarously and treacherously murdered by his former friends, the Hurons, to whom he had been of immense service for so many years. The reason for this bloodthirsty deed is not known. Whether he had given some unpardonable offense to his life-long friends, whether the deed was incited by outside agencies, or whether it occurred in some drunken orgie, it is impossible to tell. He was clubbed to death. But his foul assassins did not stop there. In their uncontrollable ferocity to take revenge on their hapless victim they feasted on his lifeless remains. It may fairly be inferred that Brulé was neither better nor worse than the hundreds of others who, like him, have spent their lives among the savages of America, but it is unfair to cast slurs upon his memory, as has been done by a few writers, without proof. A Pennsylvania writer with no better sources of information than anyone else has this fling at him: "Yet a man, it would appear, of qualities not all heroic."¹⁷ From some of his contemporaries who knew him best, and were associated with him, we get different reports. From the Jesuit missionary, John de Brebuef, who was associated with him for a period of seven years, we get this: "I also saw the place where the poor Etienne Brulé had been barbarously murdered." Evidently the good father bore no ill will towards his old companion, or he would not have spoken so sympathetically of him.¹⁸ Here is another reference to him by one who knew him well, Friar Segard: "Finally this unfortunate Brulé was condemned to death and eaten by the Hurons, whom he had so long served as Interpreter, and all for a hatred they had conceived against him, for I do not know what fault he had committed with respect to them. He had dwelt with them a great many years. lived almost as they did and served as interpreter to the French, and after all that, he had gained for all recompense only a painful death, and a sad, unfortunate end. I pray God to have mercy on him and to have pity on his soul."¹⁹

Historians do not use that kind of language toward bad men, and good Franciscan Father Segard would not have done so had he believed Brulé to have been a bad man.

But their cruel deed brought consternation and dread even to the hearts of the savages. The village where the deed was done was burned to the ground, its inhabitants fled to a distant spot, and built a new town—all because they feared some terrible judgment would overtake them if they longer remained where Brulé was killed. They would, if possible, avert what was feared might be an awful punishment for their crime. A terrible pestilence devastated the land a considerable time after the event, and not a few of the savages were convinced it was because of their deed. A sister of the murdered Brulé was said to have been seen flying over the country, breathing death and destruction as she hastened onward. She was her brother's avenger, and nothing could stay her onward course. So it was that the woman carried terror to the minds of the guilty Hurons, and the deadly pestilence could not be assuaged.*

Conclusion.

It was Etienne Brulé's misfortune not to have lived in the era of the daily newspaper and the ubiquitous reporter. He was with the expedition that discovered Lake Huron ten years before the Pilgrim psalmody was heard at Plymouth Rock; six years after Hendrick Hudson discovered the river that bears his name he stood on the shores of Lake Ontario, and by an arduous tour within the same year connected Chesapeake Bay with the Great Lakes, traversing the broad expanse of our own State to do so, nearly seventy years before William Penn first saw the land that bears his name. Finally, he was the first white man to gaze on the broad expanse of Lake Superior. All in all, we will not go far amiss if we pronounce him, so far as actual achievements are concerned, the greatest explorer the new World has ever known.

Inasmuch as the various nations that came into contact with the Indian tribes of Canada, New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Maryland and other localities did not give these tribes the same name, not a little confusion has arisen from that diverse nomenclature. Captain John Smith, the first white man to come in contact with the Susquehannocks, called them Sasqueshannocks, and their town nearest the mouth of the Susquehanna river, Sasquesahanough. The Dutch and Swedish writers called them Minquas, Mengue and Mingoes. The French called them Andastes, Gandastogues and Carantouains, the latter evidently from their stockaded town Carantouan. They were also called Conestogas as early as 1700. Although racially Iroquois, they allied themselves with the Algonquins, and were almost continually at war with the Iroquois confederacy.

The most advanced form of governmental and tribal relationship was shown by the Iroquois, so-called by the French, but more generally known by the English as the Five Nations—the Onondagos, Senecas, Oneldas, Cayugas and Mohawks: when the Tuscaroras were admitted to their confederacy in 1713-1722, they were known as the Six Nations. They had had upwards of fifty towns and at one time numbered 16,000 souls. They were also called Mengues, Minckquas and Mingos, being of the same stock as the Conestogas. Captain Smith called them Massawomeks.

Still another large confederacy occupied the shores of the Delaware river from southern New York to Delaware. They were called Lenape or Leni-lenape; and were the most important of all the Algonquin stock. The English knew them as Delawares. The Mohicans, Nanticokes, Conoys and Shawnees were all of this stock, and are believed to have had a common origin. They too were compelled to yield to the all-conquering Iroquois, who about 1720 assumed dominion over them. Their number never exceeded 3,000.

The Hurons were among the most powerful of the tribes in the valley of the St. Lawrence. Their real locality at the time the French came in contact with them was on Lake Simcoe, Georgian Bay and the Ottawa and Trent rivers, in Canada. They were of Iroquois stock, but were continually at war with the five allied Iroquois tribes of New York. Like the latter, they formed a federation of four tribes, and several other smaller tribes, who sought their protection. In their own tongue they called themselves "Wendats," which in time was corrupted to Yendats, Guyandotts and finally into "Wyandots." The French first came into communication with them in 1534; they found some of these Indians on the islands of the St. Lawrence, on the present sites of Montreal and Quebec. Even then they were at war with the New York Iroquois. Their numbers were estimated by the Jesuit Fathers at from 20,000 to 35,000, with more than 50 towns or villages, many of which were strongly palisaded or fortified. Their frequent wars with the Five Nations eventually broke up their federation, and to-day there are perhaps less than 1,000 in Canada and various parts of the United States.

Minutes of the January Meeting.

Lancaster, Pa., Jan. 3, 1913.

The annual meeting of the Lancaster County Historical Society was held on Friday evening in the public library building, with a good attendance, despite the disagreeable weather. President Steinman was in the chair. The annual reports of officers showed the affairs of the society to be in good condition.

Miss Bausman, the librarian, reported a number of donations during the month of December. Mr. B. F. Owen, of Reading, presented, through Mr. F. R. Diffenderffer, a number of very valuable church records, in manuscript. They include the record of the baptisms, marriages and burials in the five Episcopal churches on the borders of Lancaster, Chester and Berks counties as follows: St. Mary's, Warwick township, Chester county; St. Mark's, Honeybrook, Chester county; St. Thomas, Morgantown, Berks county; Bangon, Churchtown, Lancaster county, and St. John's, Compassville, Chester and Lancaster counties. A vote of thanks was extended Mr. Owen for his gift, which comprises a book of 151 pages. Mr. D. B. Landis contributed copies of the "Souvenir and Register of the Second Annual Landis Family Reunion at Lititz" and the "Centennial Souvenir History of Mt. Joy and Florin," compiled by Levi F. Sheetz. Rev. George I. Browne presented a copy of the sermon he delivered at the unveiling of the Diller memorial tablet at St.

John's Episcopal Church. The usual bulletins were received during the month.

Walter Bausman, 115 East Thirty-fourth street, New York, was nominated for membership and the following were elected: Mrs. J. B. Hutchinson, 1304 Spruce street, Philadelphia; William Bachman, 46 East Orange street, city; Miss Sue Geyer, 30 North Prince street, city.

The annual report of the librarian showed that the society has secured by donations and purchase a large number of very valuable books during the past year. Included among them were the Census Report of 1890 and 1900, acquired through Mr. F. R. Diefenderffer; the entire collection of thirty-eight volumes from the New York Historical Society, by courtesy of the society; the first thirteen volumes of the Pennsylvania-German Society, part being a gift from the Berks County Historical Society and part from Mrs. M. R. Cowell, and the very valuable collection of historical books from the library of the late Franklin H. Breneman, acquired through the courtesy of Mrs. M. N. Robinson. The number of books registered in the library at the end of 1912 was 2,378, and of this number 207 were added during the year.

On motion the report was received and filed.

The annual report of the recording secretary, Mr. C. B. Hollinger, gave the total present membership of the society as 260. Twenty-five new members were elected during the year and seven died. The society's sixteenth volume of publications comprises a book of over 300 pages. The report was, on motion, received and filed.

The treasurer, Mr. A. K. Hostetter, presented his annual statement, showing the society's finances to be in fairly good condition. The report was accepted and on motion referred to the auditing committee, Miss Clark, Mr. Magee and Mr. Slaymaker, which reported the accounts correct.

The annual election of officers resulted as follows: President, George Steinman; Vice Presidents, F. R. Diffenderffer, Litt.D., and W. U. Hensel, Esq.; Corresponding Secretary, Miss Martha B. Clark; Recording Secretary, C. B. Hollinger; Librarian, Miss Lottie M. Bausman; Treasurer, A. K. Hostetter; Executive Committee, Mrs. S. B. Carpenter, Mrs. M. N. Robinson, D. F. Magee, Esq., H. Frank Eshleman, Esq., D. B. Landis, G. F. K. Erisman, Dr. R. K. Buehrle, L. B. Herr, J. L. Summy, Monroe B. Hirsh.

Attention was called to the annual meeting of the State Federation of Historical Societies, which will be held in the rooms of the Dauphin County Historical Society at Harrisburg, January 16. The local society will be represented and members who attend will be recognized as duly accredited delegates.

A resolution was adopted endorsing the proposed history of Lancaster county and giving the movement all the encouragement possible.

Mr. W. U. Hensel presented a preliminary report on the recent Portraiture Exhibition which was held under the joint auspices of the Historical Society and the Iris Club.

The nineteenth volume of the Journals of the Continental Congress was ordered purchased.

On motion, the Secretary was directed to draw an order for the payment of the insurance on the library and curios.

The sum of $25 was ordered paid the librarian for the purchase of books and current expenses.

The paper of the evening was "The First White Man in Pennsylvania and in Lancaster County," written by F. R. Diffenderffer and read by John A. Coyle, Esq. That high honor was claimed for Etienne Brule, a young Frenchman, who came to the new world with Samuel de Champlain, the founder of the French dominion of Canada, in 1608, when only eighteen years old. He never returned to Europe, but remained among the Indians until his untimely death at their hands at the early age of thirty-six years, eighteen of which were spent in explorations in America. This is the man the historian Parkman calls "The dauntless woodsman, pioneer of pioneers. Etienne Brule, the interpreter." During the winter of 1615-16 he passed down the Susquehanna, through Pennsylvania and Maryland to the open ocean, and returned to his starting point. He was with the expedition that discovered Lake Huron ten years before the Pilgrim psalmody was heard at Plymouth Rock; six years after Hendrick Hudson discovered the river that bears his name he stood on the shores of Lake Ontario, and by an arduous tour within the same years connected Chesapeake Bay with the Great Lakes, traversing the broad expanse of our own State to do so, and nearly seventy years before William Penn first saw the land that bears his name. Finally, he was the first white man to gaze on the broad expanse of Lake Superior. All in all we will not go far amiss if we pronounce him, so far as actual personal achievements are concerned, the greatest explorer the new world has ever known.

A vote of thanks was extended the writer and the reader.

The newly elected Executive Committee held a meeting after the regular session and organized by electing Mr. A. K. Hostetter chairman. A number of matters were acted upon. A resolution was adopted to the effect that hereafter the chairman must be notified at least a week previous to the regular meeting what paper or papers are to be read. This resolution will be strictly enforced.

In Memoriam.

CHARLES T. STEIGERWALT.

Charles T. Steigerwalt, for a number of years a member of the Lancaster County Historical Society, and for a time its librarian, passed away March 29, 1912, at St. Joseph's Hospital. Mr. Steigerwalt was well known to numismatists and collectors of antiques all over the country.

The deceased was a son of the late Henry J. Steigerwalt, of this city, and was born June 28, 1858. Soon after leaving the public schools he began his work as a collector, and was a recognized authority on coins and antiques. He held membership in the leading American numismatist societies and was a member of Trinity Lutheran Church and of the Young Republicans.

REV. DR. HENRY G. GANSS.

Rev. Dr. Henry G. Ganss, rector of St. Mary's Catholic Church, and one of the leading divines in the city, died suddenly on Christmas Day, 1912, at the rectory. He was seized with cerebral hemorrhage while seated at the dinner table and passed away later in the evening. Dr. Ganss had a notable career, having been especially distinguished for his musical attainments, and he leaves as a monument to his memory and his rare talents a number of compositions that are widely celebrated, and reveal a musicianship of the soundest and highest qualities, while in his clerical work and achievements he won the confidence of his superiors in the church, and the love, cordial and lasting, of his parishioners. Dr. Ganss was born in this city February 22, 1855. He was a son of the late Geo. Ganss, and descended from an old and respected Lancaster family. As a youth he attended the St. Joseph parochial school. He then took a six years' course in the classics and music at St. Vincent's College, Latrobe, Pa., where he was prepared for the priesthood. In 1876 he was graduated as a doctor of music, and two years later he was ordained to the priesthood. He served three years as rector at Milton, Pa., and then served the Carlisle parish for a period of twenty years, coming from there to Lancaster. He had been a trustee of Todd Hospital, Carlisle; a member of the Cumberland County Historical Society and a director of the Hamilton Library Association. He took an absorbing interest in the cause of the American Indians, and had much opportunity to study them at the Carlisle Indian School. In the Indian missions he labored with zeal, and his work was recognized by Cardinal Gibbons, who appointed him financial agent of the Catholic Indian missions. As a composer of religious music Dr. Ganss had an international reputation. He wrote a number of masses, which are found in the libraries of the best choirs in the Catholic denomination. In 1880 he won the prize for the national hymn of the American navy, his composition being entitled, "The Banner of the Sea," and there were 145 competitors, including musicians from this country and abroad. His papal hymn, "Long Live the Pope," has been translated into twenty-five languages, which is ample evidence of its popularity. He was honored by having it sung in the presence of the Pope by the Sistine choir, of Rome. Scarcely less celebrated as a musician was the Doctor as an author, and many of his works on historical subjects are authoritative. Among his more noted books are the following: "New Phases of an Old Fallacy," now in its second edition; "History of St. Patrick's Church, Carlisle, Pa."; ten pamphlets dealing with Luther and the Reformation subjects; Anglican Orders and the Indian question. He was an important contributor to the "American Catholic Quarterly Review," "American Ecclesiastical Review," "Catholic World," "The Messenger," "The Ave Maria" and "The Catholic Encyclopedia." To the latter he contributed the sketch of Martin Luther, which is regarded as a very learned presentation of the subject. He was a member of the Lancaster County Historical Society. He was laid to rest in St. Mary's Cemetery, his grave being near that of the beloved Father Keenan.

JOHN HOFF BAUMGARDNER.

John Hoff Baumgardner, one of Lancaster's best known citizens, died on Wednesday, December 2, 1912, death being due to pleurisy following a severe cold. By his death Lancaster lost a citizen who was for a long period of years very actively associated with its civic, historic and business affairs. He belonged, too, to a family that was unusually prominent in the business world. He was born in Lancaster, April 23, 1843, and was in his seventieth year. He was a graduate of the Lancaster High School and the Philadelphia Polyclinic College. He was among the organizers of the Lancaster Gas, Light and Fuel Company, and general manager for many years. He was also the treasurer of what was then the Lancaster Street Railway Company, which built the railway line from Centre Square to McGrann's Park, the nucleus of the present magnificent trolley system of our county. He was interested in the first company to institute independent markets in Lancaster, the Northern Market Company being the first organized under such conditions. He was a director of the Reading and Columbia Railroad Company; a trustee of the Lancaster Cemetery; president of the American Mechanics' Building and Loan Association; president of the Board of Trustees of the Ann C. Witmer Home; a trustee of the Mechanics' Library. He was a former member of City Council, one of the organizers of the famous Tucquan Club, a charter member of the Hamilton, a member of the Lancaster County Historical Society, and was the first chief of the old volunteer fire department. He was a member of the Masonic fraternity.

FRANKLIN H. BRENEMAN.

Franklin H. Breneman, who was one of Lancaster's prominent citizens, died on Saturday, January 8, 1912. He was in his seventy-sixth year, having been born in 1836. He commenced business life early, having in 1853 entered the service of the Lancaster County Bank, later changing to the Lancaster County National Bank. He continued all his life with this institution, passing through its various positions until 1881, when he succeeded Mr. Peifer as cashier. In 1890 he was elected president, and continued to fill that office until 1906, when he resigned on account of failing health and strength. Thus he served this one institution fifty-three years. He was a member of the Lancaster County Historical Society.

HARRIS BOARDMAN.

Harris Boardman, Superintendent of the Edison Electric Company, and a well known citizen, died suddenly on July 25, at Atlantic City, where he had gone for his health. The deceased, who was forty-six years of age, had been connected with the Edison Electric Company for a period of fifteen years, rising from a position of obscurity to that of superintendent. He was a man of fine mechanical ability, an inherited trait, his father, Harris Boardman, having been noted as a mechanical genius. He was a member of the Lancaster County Historical Society, the First Presbyterian Church and Lamberton Lodge of Masons.

MISS HARRIET HEITSHU.

Miss Harriet Heitshu, well known to many of the older residents of Lancaster, died June 15, 1912, death resulting from paralysis, with which the deceased had been afflicted for some years. The deceased was a daughter of the late Daniel Heitshu, who conducted a hat store on the site now occupied by the Woolworth Building. Since the death of her father she had lived alone in her Lime street home. She was a member of St. Paul's Reformed Church and the Lancaster County Historical Society.

HENRY MATHIAS WEAVER.

Henry Mathias Weaver, a prominent and influential citizen of Mansfield, Ohio, died of paralysis, after a lingering illness, on October 3, 1912. He was born in Philadelphia, July 13, 1843, and educated at Kenyon College. In 1869 he went to Mansfield, leaving his parental home in Columbus, Ohio, where he had since been actively identified with the commercial, intellectual and aesthetic developments of his adopted city. He was engaged in the wholesale boot and shoe business for twenty-five years in Mansfield and Kansas City, Mo., and later managed the business of the Barr Cash and Package Carrier company, also acting as director in some of Mansfield's leading corporations, and was honored by having patents granted to him on many of his inventions. He served as City Councilman, trustee of the Memorial Opera House, Memorial Library Association, and as Park Commissioner, where he found scope for the exercise of his naturally artistic ability, which had been cultivated by study and travel. Mr. Weaver, although not a resident of Lancaster county, had many claims through his ancestry, and was much interested in the proceedings of the Society, taking pleasure in receiving the publications, particularly the pamphlet relating to the early settlement of the Germans, at the time of the Bi-Centennial in 1910. Mr. Weaver was elected a member of the Lancaster County Historical Society on May 3, 1901, but never attended a meeting. At one time he promised a member of the Society he would prepare a paper on the Weaver Family, but it is presumed failing health prevented him from giving us what would have been historically an addition to our library. About 1717 four brothers of the name of Weaver, or Weber, emigrated from Zurich, Switzerland, and settled in what is now Lancaster county. John Weaver purchased land in Strasburg township, but the three brothers, Jacob, Henry and George, bought land in East Earl township, lying on the banks of the Conestoga Creek, which was named Weaver Land—or Weber Thal. Henry M. Weaver was a descendant of Jacob Weaver, one of the pioneers, and also of the well-known Brackbill family. Captain Robert Good, of Revolutionary fame, and a native of Ireland, was another Lancaster county ancestor, who was a member of Colonel Peter Grubb's battalion of Lancaster County Militia. Robert Good married Jane Davis, a granddaughter of William Davis, a Welshman, who settled in Radnor, Delaware county, and she was also the daughter of Edward Davis, of Churchtown, Lancaster county. Mr. Weaver leaves a widow, Helen, daughter of James Purdy, of Mansfield, and a son, Henry P. Weaver.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE SECRETARY.

The year 1912, just closed, will go down in the archives of the Lancaster County Historical Society as one of the most important in its long career, marked as it has been by many notable events that have aided in advancing the work for which the Society was organized, as set forth in the call issued November 11, 1886—"to make a systematic effort to gather and preserve the material relating to the history of Lancaster county." During the past year the members have contributed a large amount of historical matter bearing on our early history, its value being enhanced by the fact that it was along lines of original research and nearly all new to the Society and the general public. From the excellent article, On the Conestoga River, read at the January meeting by Mr. F. R. Diffenderffer, to the paper on Peter Lehn Grosh, read at the last meeting by Herbert H. Beck, the Society has enjoyed at its monthly sessions a series of papers that have been most edifying and instructive. Let us hope that the year upon which we have just entered will be just as productive of good things along historical lines.

Two marked events stand out in the year's work—the very successful celebration held at Williamson Park, where was unveiled the tablet erected to the memory of General Edward Hand and other Lancaster sons who fought in the War of the Revolution, and the exhibition of local portraiture held in conjunction with the Iris Club. Both of them have served to bring the Lancaster County Historical Society to the forefront in the galaxy of similar organizations throughout the country. The details of both these events have been so fully set forth in our monthly pamphlets that it will be useless for me to review them in this report.

As part of the duties of the office of recording secretary, there has been compiled ten numbers of the pamphlets of the Society, which, combined, form the sixteenth volume, making a book of almost 300 pages. In the nature of its contents and the general make-up it compares more than favorably with previous volumes. To the December issue has been added the history of Jacob Eichholtz, portrait painter, compiled by Mr. W. U. Hensel, and in connection with it are a number of reprints from the portraits on recent exhibition. This addition serves to make the volume one of exceeding great value. The suggestion has been made by one of our members that the catalogue of the Portrait Exhibition be bound in with Volume 16, by those members who were fortunate enough to secure copies of them. The suggestion is an excellent one.

The usual monthly meetings of the Society have been held during the year with a very good attendance. In fact, the attendance, taking the year as a whole, was far ahead of previous years. Twenty-five new members were elected during the year, while seven members passed to the Great Beyond, leaving the total present membership 260.

The secretary wishes to acknowledge the assistance given during the year by the various officers of the Society, which has helped to make his duties most pleasant ones.

In closing this rather uninteresting report, I wish to extend the hope that the year 1913 will be a most prosperous and profitable one, not only for the Society, but for each individual member.

Signed,

C. B. HOLLINGER,
Recording Secretary.

ANNUAL REPORT OF LIBRARIAN.

Lancaster, Jan. 3, 1913.

The report here offered for the year 1912 of the library, its condition, its usefulness, in all that it stands for to this Society, is one which shows continued progress. The classified condition called forth early in the year the question of insuring so valuable a collection. This was promptly done by the committee appointed to attend to the matter. Its usefulness was tested not only by members of this Society, but by many visitors from beyond the county and from other States. Many valuable books were added during the year, most of them being gifts to the library. Among the largest and most valuable additions placed on the shelves were the Census Report of 1890 and also that of 1900, acquired through the personal interest of Mr. F. R. Diffenderffer; the entire collection of 38 volumes of the New York Historical Society, by courtesy of that society; the first 13 volumes of the Pennsylvania German Society, part being a gift from the Historical Society of Berks County and part a gift from Mrs. M. R. Cowell; and the very valuable historical collection from the library of the late Franklin R. Breneman, acquired through the personal interest of Mrs. M. N. Robinson. With the last donation a bookcase, also, was received, which was most acceptable, owing to the pressing necessity for shelf room. Many smaller donations were received of proportionate value.

The number of books in the library registered at the end of 1912 were:

Bound volumes	2,378
Added during the year	207

Of these:

By gift	172
By purchase	7
Bound by Society	28

The number of books added exceeds the number of the year previous by nine. The Society purchased only half as many as it did in 1911, had six less bound, but in gifts received twenty-two more.

A number of old relics and curios were contributed by members and friends during the year, and these may be of much interest to the public some day, when it is possible to display them.

Major General Samuel Peter Heintzelman.

The memory of great and good men will not perish. History-generators usually find some occasion, not only to remember the names and deeds, but to come together on some festive occasion, and, with a united effort, laud the great and varied deeds of men who have been prominent in days gone by.

It chanced to be so on July 2, 1912, when a centenary celebration was held at Manheim, Lancaster county, Pa., at which the memory of Major General Samuel Peter Heintzelman was the most conspicuous feature and in whose honor a memorial volume was then published.

Although his brilliant attainments and well-merited honors during his military life have shed a halo of glory over his surroundings, yet we feel that he has never received the recognition in the historic annals of Lancaster county which he so richly deserved.

We hope the day is not far distant when the beautiful square in the central part of his native town will be still more beautified by the erection of a fitting monument to the memory of his noble deeds.

With the old adage, "Honor to whom honor is due," in mind, the writer herewith begs to submit the following sketch.

Before proceeding on the review of his life-work, however, let us give a little attention to his ancestry:

John George Heintzleman, I.

The first ancestor of General S. P. Heintzelman of whom we have any knowledge was a merchant of Augsburg, Germany.

He was born November 9, 1642, and his first marriage occurred April 16, 1663 to Appolonia Wöhrlin. She having died, he was again married, on May 28, 1699, to Susan Böhlerin, and again on October 22, 1708, to Maria Kreydeman, born in Mohrenbergin. He died November 10, 1717. The first marriage was blessed with five children, the youngest of which was John George Heintzelman, II., born 1689, and who, in 1717, was married to Regine Sabina Garbin. He died in 1731. This marriage was blessed with six children, the youngest of which was Hieronimus, born in 1730. In company with two of his brothers he went to England and became interested in the East Indian Trade. In 1756 he left there for America as First Lieutenant in "The Royal Americans." He located at Manheim, Lancaster county, where he married Catharine Elizabeth Wagner, a daughter of Pastor Tobias Wagner, who came to Pennsylvania from Horkheim, Germany, in 1743, and who became intimately associated in church work with Rev. H. M. Muhlenberg, Casper Stoeber and others, at Tulpehocken, Lancaster, Reading and New Holland, and who in 1759 returned to Europe, where, sometime afterwards, he died.

Maria Wagner, a sister of Catharine Elizabeth, was married December, 19, 1811, to John Stille, and among their six children are found Drs. Alfred and Charles J. Stille, of Philadelphia, the latter of whom was former Provost of the University of Pennsylvania.

In the cemetery at Manheim, adjoining the Lutheran Church, familiarly known as the "Red Rose Church," is a tombstone which, with German inscription, marks the grave of Heironymus Heintzelman, born August 9, 1730; died November 25, 1796, aged 66 years, 3 months, 16 days.

Although this was the first ancestor from which we are able to trace the lineal descent of Maj. S. P. Heintzelman, yet we find by exhaustive researches that there were two earlier arrivals in Lancaster county from Germany of members of the Heintzelman family, and, whilst we have not been able to trace any kinship between them and the General's family, yet I beg to refer to them briefly, with the thought it may probably be of some assistance in future genealogical researches.

In 1851 Rev. J. W. Richards, one of the leading divines of the Lutheran Church in Reading, wrote a series of biographical sketches of early Lutheran ministers who were prominent in church work in Lancaster and adjoining counties. Rev. Richards was connected with the Muhlenberg and Weiser families. One of these sketches, a copy of which has been filed among the records of our society, refers to Rev. John Dietrich Matthias Heintzelman, who was born in 1726, in the city of Saltzwedel, in Altenmark, Germany. He was the son of a country doctor, received a collegiate education, was ordained to the ministry July 11, 1751, and was sent to this country in company with Rev. Frederick Shulze (who became Muhlenberg's assistant in church and school work in Trappe and other places). They reached Philadelphia, December 12, 1751. In November, 1754, he was married to Margaret, the second daughter of the noted pioneer, Conrad Weiser. He died February 9, 1756, and is buried in St. Michael's Church, Philadelphia, near the altar. In a letter written by Weiser, to Sec. Peters, on May 19, 1755, he says (referring to two individuals): "If you could prevail with Mr. Heintzelman, my son-in-law, for a few weeks board with him it would be agreeable to the lads, because my daughter is somewhat used to the Indians and understands here and there a word." In his will, which was probated in the Register's office of Berks county July 31, 1760, he also mentions his grandson, Israel Heintzelman, as follows: "One Hundred Pounds out of the share allotted to his mother shall be put to interest and managed for his best advantage, until he arrives at the age of twenty-one, and then be paid to him with the profits thereof, etc."

In Volume 17, of the second series of the Pennsylvania Archives, on page 424, appears a record of another early arrival of the Heintzelmans, in the person of Hans George Heintzelman, who was registered as one of the passengers on the ship "Eastern Branch," James Nevin, Captain, from Rotterdam, late from Portsmouth, England. He took the oath of allegiance to the Crown of Great Britain and the Province of Pennsylvania October 3, 1753.

The name Hieronymus, translated into the English language appears in some of the records as Jeremiah, and in others as Jerome, all referring to the same person. In making these researches this fact proved to be very troublesome, particularly so in comparing the church records with the Court records.

Troubles also seemed to prevail in the early days of Hieronimus' (Jerome's) career in his newly-chosen country, for in the office of the Recorder of Deeds in Lancaster, in book

"P," page 63, we find a record of an "Assignment," made by Jerome and Catharine Heintzelman (his wife), for the benefit of their creditors, to James Rolf and others, on July 7, 1767. In this deed of assignment appears an inventory and a list of the moneys due to him (Jerome) by various people. In later years, however, we find that he has again recovered from his financial reverses, and at the time of his death was quite prosperous. In the Pennsylvania Gazette for 1775 appears a notice to delinquent lot-holders in Mannheim to pay their arrearages at the house of Jerome Heintzelman on the 10th or 11th of November, otherwise the lots will be seized by the proprietors.

We find in the Recorder's office of Lancaster, in Book No. 21, page 203, that this same Jeremiah (Hieronymus), innkeeper and merchant, bought a tract of land from Henry William Stiegel, by conveyance dated February 1, 1774; that he made his last will and testament under date of February 28, 1796.

His will was probated on April 5, 1797, in Will book "G," Volume 1, page 155. On July 30, 1800, his widow, Catherine Elizabeth, who was the executrix under his will, sold his property to Emanuel Dyer. In the office of the Register of Wills we find on file an inventory of Jeremiah Heintzelman's effects, a copy of which (as nearly identical with the original as possible, as regards capital letters, spelling, etc.), has been filed in the archives of this Society. A tombstone in the Mannheim cemetery aforesaid gives the date of her birth as July 9, 1741; death, July 29, 1821. Age, 80 years, 20 days.

Jeremiah and Catharine Heintzelman were survived by five children, viz: John, Peter, Jerome, Frederick and Elizabeth.

John, the first named, was also an innkeeper. He built of logs the first hotel in Manheim, known as the "Black Horse." We have found no record of the date of this building, but find that he is credited with the payment of sixteen shillings and six pence, ground rent on his "Inn-lot" in Manheim, in 1796. Aside from being an inn-keeper, John, Sr., was also engaged in the clock-making industry, and there are at present some very fine specimens of his handicraft in existence, one of which, a tall "Grandfather's clock," can be seen in Danner's Museum in Manheim. He was married to Barbara Stroh, from which marriage two sons were born, viz: John and Samuel, both of whom became practicing physicians in the town. It is evident that John, Sr., died sometime in 1804, for we find that in the Register's office in Lancaster an inventory of his effects, dated November 12, 1804, a copy of which, like that in the above-named instance, has also been filed in our archives.

In 1818 Barbara, the widow of John Sr., was married to Samuel Geehr, and a short time afterwards they moved to Lebanon county.

Peter, the second son of Jerome, was a merchant and deputy postmaster in Manheim. He was married to Ann Elizabeth Grubb, a daughter of Peter Grubb, ironmaster, of near Manheim, September 8, 1799, by Rev. M. Hlester. At the time of his death they were survived by five children, viz: Maria, Juliana, (General) Samuel P., Henry and Elizabeth, the last three being minors at the time of their father's death. It is said that two of Peter's children died young. In the early Manheim Lutheran Church records, now in possession of Mannheim's noted antiquarian, Mr. George Danner, appears the following baptismal record: "Hieronymus Wagner, son of Peter Heintzelman and Elizabeth Grubb, his wife, born July 30, 1804; baptized October 7, 1804."

Another entry in the same book refers to Frederick, a son of Hieronymus Heintzelman and Catharine, his wife, born December 5, 1780; baptized December 19, 1780.

In the office of the Register of Deeds, we find, in Book "14," page 85, on March 15, 1817, that he sold to John Wagner, of Philadelphia, a plot of ground, 71 feet, on Prussian street, Mannheim, Pa.

In the Orphans' Court Records, in Miscellaneous Book, 1822-1825, page 384, it is shown that Peter died October, 1824, and that David May, of Warwick Township, and Abraham Reist, of Rapho township, have taken out letters of administration, with Christian Rohrer as their bondsman, each in the sum of $947. This record shows that he had a lot of ground in Mannheim, known as No. 6, containing three acres and fifty-seven perches also a lot of ground in the town of Richland (now Mount Joy), Lancaster county, numbered in their general plan as No. 69. The administrators pray the Court to grant an order to sell these properties, so as to pay the existing debts, and to provide for the maintenance and education of the minor children of said intestate. This privilege was granted by the Court, and the sale ordered to be held December 18, 1824, at the house of Margaret Jeffries, in Mannheim, the terms of payment being payable "in cash, April 1, 1825."

On page 406 of the same book the administrators make their report to the Court, showing that, in pursuance of the above order, they have sold the Manheim lot to Catherine Stauffer for $402, the Mt. Joy township plot to Christian Shower for $46.56, the Richland lot to William Canen for $25. In the same office, in Miscellaneous accounts, 1831 to 1833, page 173, the administrators have filed their account, which was duly passed by the Register and confirmed by the Court, showing a balance in their hands of 176.83¾ cents, and directed that the same be distributed agreeable to law.

The first account of the administrators was filed in the Register's office in 1832, and the final account in 1835. This account shows a one-sixth interest in a factory in Annville, and a one-sixth interest in a seventy-acre farm in Lebanon county.

In the Register's office in Miscellaneous book, 1808-1813, appears a petition of Peter Heintzelman, administrator of Frederick (his brother), late of Donegal township, showing an inventory of $622.61. Frederick was indebted to Peter, by bond, dated January 1, 1809, for £1,258, and interest, on which note appeared a credit entry of £35, 8 pence and 4 shillings, the balance still due, and owing. Frederick owned two lots in the village of Waterford, Donegal township, appraised at $270.

In this petition he prays the Court to grant an order to have these lots sold.

The records of the Hope Hose Company, which centennial anniversary we have recently celebrated, show that Peter and John Heintzelman were both charter members of that organization in 1812. Peter was listed as one of the men who shall work the hooks, and John as one of the men who shall work the engine.

Nearby the tombstones previously mentioned are those of Peter and his wife, Anna Elizabeth Heintzelman, the inscriptions on both of which are also in German. The former states that Peter was born September 30, 1758; died October 5, 1824; aged 56 years and 5 days. His wife's tombstone gives the date of her birth as December 25, 1774, her death as September 7, 1812; aged 37 years, 8 months, 13 days.

John Conrad Heintzelman's grave is also marked here, giving his date of birth as August 22, 1766, his death as September 3, 1804, his age as 33 years and 11 days.

Elizabeth, the only daughter of Hieronimus, was first married to John McCartney, and afterwards, in 1805, to John Wolfley. By the second marriage they had four children.

We have now reached that part of the "Family tree" from which Samuel Peter Heintzelman, the subject of this sketch, branches out. He was born September 30, 1805, in the house which in later years was owned and occupied by the late Hon. J. C. Snavely, M. D., located on South Prussian street, a few doors from Market Square. The writer remembers very well his frequent visits to the doctor's office, and the quaint, old, lattice-work vestibule through which the office was entered from the pavement. The building which now stands there is said to be the same structure, with slight alterations, which stood there more than one hundred years ago.

Samuel received his boyhood education in the limited pay schools of his native town.

On July 1, 1822, upon the recommendation of James Buchanan, he was admitted to the Military Academy at West Point, as student No. 445. His record here was very good, and he graduated from this institution on July 1, 1826, with a rank of seventeen in a class of forty-one. Following that he spent a few weeks at Mannheim. In a journal which he then kept he writes that he and his sisters spent that day in destroying papers that had been in the family for over one hundred years. We now find our young man, at the age of twenty-one, fully prepared for military service, being at once, on the day of his graduation, given the position of Brevet Second Lieutenant in the Third Infantry. He served in garrisons at Jefferson Barracks, Mo., during part of 1826-27; at Ft. Mackinac, Mich., 1827-28; and Ft. Gratiot, Mich., 1828-31; on topographic duty from April 6, 1832, to May 1, 1834; in garrison at Fort Brady, Wis., where he was made First Lieutenant of the Second Infantry, on March 4, 1833. In 1834 the Seminole and Cherokee Nations of Florida and Georgia began war against the settlers on the frontier. Many runaway slaves fled to those Indians of Florida and Georgia for protection, where they took refuge in the swamps and wilds of those localities, and whither it was impossible for their owners to trace or capture them. It was at this time that Lieut. Heintzelman was ordered South and was engaged in the suppression of these Indian troubles when, in 1835, having displayed unusual executive ability as Lieutenant, he was promoted to the rank of Captain, and transferred to the Quartermaster's department, at the head of which department, until 1837, he disbursed $3,000,000, without the loss of one dollar to the Government. He was on Quartermaster duty at Columbus, Ga., in 1837; in the Florida War, 1838-1841; on November 4, 1838 he was made Captain of the Second Infantry, investigating Florida Militia claims 1841-

1842. In 1843 he was ordered to Buffalo, N. Y., where, on December 5, 1844, he was married to Miss Margaret Stewart, of Albany, N. Y. This marriage was blessed with two children, who lived to maturity, viz: Charles Stuart, who in 1876 married Emily Bailey, of New York, and who died in 1881, leaving one son, Stuart, now (1913) an officer in the United States Cavalry, and stationed at Fort Leavenworth, Kas., and Miss Mary L. Heintzelman, who resides in Washington, D. C., to whom we are indebted for much of this information. He remained in Buffalo until the following year, when he was sent to Detroit, Mich., where he remained until he was sent to Louisville, Ky., in 1846-1847; on recruiting service in 1847.

During the early part of the Mexican War he was detailed to muster in volunteers on the Ohio and Mississippi rivers. After repeated applications he was relieved from that duty, and reported to General Scott, at Vera Cruz, where he organized a battalion of recruits and convalescent soldiers, and took up his march for the City of Mexico. One of his engagements was a very severe one at Huamantla, where Major Walker, of the Texas Rangers, was killed. For this gallant and meritorious engagement he was brevetted Major, on October 9, 1847. On October 19 he had an engagement at Atlixco. He then returned to Jefferson Barracks, Mo., after which to Fort Hamilton, N. Y., in 1848. During this year peace was declared between Mexico and the United States.

It was in January, 1848, that Gen. John A. Sutter, a Swiss (whose body lies burned in the Moravian Cemetery, at Lititz), who about ten years previously been settled on the Sacramento River, in California, built a grist mill, a tannery, and a fort, naming the settlement "New Helvetia." It was at this time and place where the famous discovery of gold was made, which during the few succeeding years caused the great emigration to California. This traffic was particularly heavy over the southern route. The Indians of that section, becoming very hostile, began to murder and plunder these emigrants. To Major Heintzelman was assigned the suppression of these hostilities. He was ordered with his regiment to California, sailing thither by Cape Horn, and was assigned to the southern district of California, with headquarters at San Diego. He remained there about five years, during which time he established at the junction of the Gila and Colorado rivers, a most important port, capable of being reached by steamer with supplies and forming a secure base for future operations. This was known as Fort Yuma. He remained there in 1850-1851. In the latter part of 1851 he was stationed at San Diego, and on December 21, 1851, was engaged in the skirmish of Coyote Canon. This he did very satisfactorily to the Department, as is evidenced by the following extract from the report of one of his superior officers, which reads as follows: "The General commanding congratulates you, and the officers of your command, on the termination of the Indian War in the South. To your good judgment, and untiring energy and perseverance, the country is under many obligations for its successful termination."

On March 3, 1855, he was appointed Major of the First Infantry, and was sent to Jefferson Barracks, Mo.; was superintendent of Western recruiting service from July 1, 1855, to July 1, 1857. On leave of absence 1857-1859, during which time he temporarily took up civil life, becoming President of the Sonora Exploring and Mining Company, of Arizona, which had been formed in 1856. At various other times he had charge of the presidency of the "Defiance Mining Company," of New York; of the Mutual Guarantee Life Insurance Company, of New York, and of "The Emigration Company," of Washington, D. C.

After nearly two years of a furlough, he again took up army life, and was ordered to take command of an expedition to protect the southern borders of Texas against the marauding parties, under the leadership of the well-known guerilla chief, Cortinas. Here, again, he must have performed his duty very creditably, to merit such an endorsement as Gen. Scott gave him in the report which he sent to the War Department, from which document we quote the following extract, to wit: "This is the report of a brilliant affair, in which General Samuel P. Heintzelman distinguished himself as he has done many times, years before. I beg to ask from the War Department a brevet for him, in a small part to compensate him for these services, etc."

The Rebellion troubles, now becoming threatening, and having learned that his superior officer, Gen. Twiggs,* contemplated treason, Heintzelman who was too honorable to countenance any such action, yet was not in a position to prevent it, obtained leave of absence and returned north, where he was cordially welcomed by his old army friends. It was about this time that President Lincoln was inaugurated, and Gen. Scott appointed Major Heintzelman to assist in guarding the city against threatened outbreaks.

The Daily New Era of this city, of January 23, 1913, tells of a letter written to Allen Pinkerton in 1866, telling about the plot to kill President Lincoln, from which letter I quote the following: "Lincoln's original plan was to arrive at Calvert Station and ride in a carriage to Eutaw House, thence to Camden Station, and on to Washington. The plot was to kill him in Calvert Station. The perpetrators of the crime were to escape by steamboat to Virginia.

"Pinkerton went to Philadelphia, talked to Lincoln and induced him to change his plan so that he passed through Baltimore at an hour different from that at which he was expected. The President-elect was not excited over the situation, Mr. Pinkerton said, although he could not sleep during the whole journey, the party having left Philadelphia about midnight.

"When Washington was reached in safety and Lincoln told another of his stories, which kept his friends in good humor on the trip, he showed that he realized the seriousness of the situation by sending Pinkerton back to Baltimore to watch would-be assassins and prevent their trying to kill him on inauguration day, as was feared."

A month later Heintzelman was made general superintendent of the Recruiting station of New York; but the war clouds thickened, and his valuable services were needed in a broader field.

On May 1 he was, therefore, made acting Inspector General of the Department at Washington, and on May 27 was appointed Colonel of the Seventeenth Infantry, and ordered to the command of a brigade, consisting of four regiments of volunteers and several companies of regular cavalry and artillery at Alexandria, Va., and Arlington Heights; in the defense of Washington, D. C., from May to June,

1861; in the Manassas (sometimes called Bull Run, and Stone Ridge) campaign of July, 1861. On May 17 he was appointed Brigadier General. Here, under command of General McDowell, on July 21, he occupied the third division in the field. This battle, although desperately fought, was lost by our gallant boys. Here Gen. Heintzelman was severely wounded in his right arm. He refused to leave the field, or even to dismount; Surgeon William S. King, of the regular army, rode to his side, cut out the bullet, and dressed the mangled limb, when Heintzelman put spurs to his horse and was soon in the midst of his heroic division, leading it to the end of the fray. His arm was permanently crippled, and when he dismounted

*Gen. David E. Twiggs, who was then in command of the Army of Texas, with fifteen forts under his supervision, was expelled from the army of the United States, as indicated by the following official order: "War Department, Adjutant General's office, Washington, March 1, 1861: By direction of the President of the United States, it is ordered that Brigadier General David E. Twiggs be and is hereby dismissed from the army of the United States, for his treachery to the flag of his country, in having surrendered, on the 18th day of February, 1861, on the demand of the authorities of Texas, the military posts and other property of the U. S., in this department, and under his charge. J. Holt, (Secretary of War). By order of the Secretary of War, S. Cooper, Adjutant General." This was followed by a letter addressed to President Buchanan, and published in the Charleston Courier, of May 18, 1861, which letter reads as follows: "Your usurped right, to dismiss me from the army, might, be acquiesced in; but you have no right to brand me as a traitor. This was personal, and I shall treat it as such—not through the papers, but in person. I shall most assuredly pay a visit to Lancaster, for the sole purpose of a personal interview with you. So, Sir, prepare yourself. I am well assured that public opinion will sanction any course I may take with you." On June 2nd General Twiggs was appointed General in the Confederate army, and accepted the rank.

at the end of the day, he had been in the saddle for twenty-seven hours, and was wounded, worn and drenched.

When he returned to duty on August 2 he was placed in defense of Washington until March 16, 1862.

On March 19, 1862, by President Lincoln's war order No. 2, "The army of the Potomac" was divided into five army corps, according to seniority in rank, the Third of which, containing three divisions, was to be commanded by Gen. Heintzelman, with Kearney, Hooker and Porter as division officers, the whole army being under the command of General George B. McClellan.

He was engaged in the siege of Yorktown from April 5 to May 4. On the following day he was appointed Major General. This gallant officer was the hero of the Williamsburg fight, on May 5, and his tenacity and bravery gained that important victory, which not only avenged the recent defeat at Bull Run, but smote the Rebel heart with discouragement, which made the march to Richmond comparatively easy. His force numbered about 8,000 men, while the enemy's force numbered about three times that many. Our men, confronted by fifteen earthworks mounting heavy guns, fought for a whole day against overwhelming odds, without food or relief. They had passed the previous night in a forest in a drenching rain. Still they resisted the storm of the rebel forts, and repelled the desperate charges of the flower of the rebel army with still more determination. But there is a limit to human endurance, and Heintzelman sent frequent and urgent messages to the rear for re-enforcements. Eventually they came, under gallant George Berry, of Maine, wading through mud and rain, at such speed that he passed three other brigades. The New York Tribune says: "Heintzelman shouted with gratitude. He ran to the nearest band and ordered it to meet the coming regiment with 'Yankee Doodle,' and to give them marching time into the field with the 'Star Spangled Banner.' A wild 'Hurrah' went up from the army, and with a yell that was electric, three regiments of Berry's brigade went to the front, formed a line a mile and a half long, and commenced a volley firing that no troops on earth could stand before, then, at the double-quick, dashed with the bayonet at the rebel army, and sent them flying from the field into their earthworks, pursuing them into the largest of them; and drove them out behind with pure steel and then invited them to retake it. The attempt was repeatedly made and as often repulsed. The count of the rebel dead in the battery at the close of the fight was sixty-three. They were principally Michigan men who did this work. The equilibrium of the battle was restored."

On May 31, commanding the Third and Fourth Army Corps, he participated in the Battle of Fair Oaks, followed by the Battle of Gaines' Mill, on June 28, and by the Battle of Savage Station on the following day. On the morning of the 30th, a battle opened at Glen Dale, or Nelson's Farm, as it was sometimes called, at which Heintzelman's troops played an important part by felling trees across the road by which the rebels were to advance. This was a fiercely fought battle and resulted in defeat for the enemy. It was nearly ten o'clock on the morning of the first of July before the enemy, recovering from the stunning blow they had received the day before, emerged from the woods, advancing towards the right in front of Heintzelman's corps, but they again retreated. About three o'clock they again appeared, attacking another division of the army, when a fearful battle was fought, known as the battle of Malvern Hill, and was a complete victory for our boys.

On May 31 he was brevetted Brigadier General, for gallant and meritorious conduct at the battle of Fair Oaks, Virginia. He was in the Northern Virginia campaign during August and September, being engaged in the battle of Manassas, August 29-30, and at the battle of Chantilly, on September 1, in command of the defenses of Washington, D. C., south of the Potomac, September 9, 1862, to February 2, 1863; of the department of Washington and Twenty-second Army Corps, February 2 to October 13, 1863, and of the Northern department, headquarters, Columbus, Ohio, January 12 to October 1, 1864; on court martial duty and awaiting orders December 27, 1864, to August 24, 1865. He was brevetted Major General, U. S. Army, March 13, 1865, for gallant and meritorious service at the battle of Williamsburg, Va.

He was then sent to Texas again, where he was engaged until July 31, 1867, when he was made a member of the Examining Board, New York City, July 31, to December 31, 1867, and of Retiring Board, January 3 to November 9, 1868, and on leave of absence from November 9, 1868, to February 22, 1869, when he retired from active service, he being over sixty-two years of age.

In the Quadrennial Register of the New York Commandery, issued in 1881, we find that Major General Samuel P. Heintzelman was a member of the New York Commandery of the military order of the "Loyal Legion" of the United States. He was elected a companion (first class) on February 16, 1866.

He died at Washington, D. C., May 1, 1880, aged seventy-four.

Upon the death of General Heintzelman, the General-in-Chief of the Army issued the following order:

"The General announces to the Army of the country the death of Major General Samuel P. Heintzelman (retired) at his residence in this city, at 1 o'clock this morning, at the age of seventy-five years."

"Thus parts another link in that golden chain of memory which binds us to the past, and naught now remains of this noble soldier and gentleman except his example and the record of deeds which have contributed largely to the development and glory of his country in the last half century.

"Samuel P. Heintzelman was born at Manheim, Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, September 30, 1805; entered the Military Academy at West Point, July 1, 1822; graduated in 1826; commissioned as Brevet Second Lieutenant, Third Infantry, and Second Lieutenant, Second Infantry, July 1, 1826. In this capacity he served on the Northern Frontier at Forts Gratiot, Mackinac and Brady, when, on the Fourth of March, 1833, he was appointed First Lieutenant and served on Quartermaster's duty in Florida and the Creek country.

"On the 7th day of July, 1838, he was commissioned as Captain of the Staff in the Quartermaster's Department, remaining in Florida till the close of that war in 1842, and in 1847 joined General Scott's army in Mexico, taking an active part in several engagements for which he was brevetted Major, October 9, 1847.

"In 1848-49 he accompanied his regiment around Cape Horn to California, and for several years was very busily employed in what is now the Territory of Arizona, receiving the brevet of Lieut. Colonel for his conduct in the campaign against the Yuma Indians, which terminated hostilities in that quarter.

"March 3, 1855, he was promoted to Major of the First Infantry, and served with that regiment on the Texas frontier, rendering most valuable service against the organized marauders under Cortinas, and contributing largely to the safety of that newly-acquired region of our country.

"The Civil War of 1861 found him at Fort Columbus, N. Y. harbor, superintending the general recruiting service, and with the ardor of his nature, and with his whole soul and might, he embarked in that terrible conflict; first appointed Colonel of the now Seventeenth Infantry, he was rapidly advanced to Brigadier and Major General, holding high and important commands throughout the entire war, attaining the rank of Major General of Volunteers and Brevet Major General of the Regular Army. A record of these services would pass the limits of this obituary notice, but when the war closed no name on our Register bore a more honorable record.

"On February 22, 1869, having attained the age of sixty-five, and having served continuously in the army forty-five years, he voluntarily retired, as Major General, and has since spent most of his time here in Washington till this bright day of May, 1880.

"Gen. Heintzelman was a man of intense nature, of vehement action, guided by sound judgment and a cultivated taste. Universally respected and beloved, at a ripe old age he leaves us, universally regretted.

"Well done, thou good and faithful servant." May our end be as peaceful and as much deplored as his!

"The funeral will take place from his residence, No. 1123 Fourteenth street, at 9 a. m., on Monday, May 3, instant, and will be escorted to the Sixth Street Depot by a battalion of the Marine Corps and a battalion of the Second Artillery. The commanding officer of the artillery troops at the Washington Arsenal will detail an officer, a non-commissioned officer, and three men to accompany the remains to Buffalo for final interment.

"The officers of the army in this city are requested to attend the funeral ceremonies on Monday.

"By command of:

"GENERAL SHERMAN.

"E. D. TOWNSEND,

"Adjutant General."

The following notice appeared under telegraphic news in the Manheim Sentinel, May 7, 1880: "For the Sentinel. Washington Correspondence, Washington, D. C., May 3, 1880. General S. P. Heintzelman, U. S. Army, quite prominent during the early days of the Civil War, and very much respected wherever known, died in this city, on Saturday. His remains will be carried to Buffalo, N. Y., for interment.

"M. M. W."

A little later a more extended announcement was made in the same paper, among the locals, as follows: "Death of Major General Heintzelman. We are sorry to record the death of Major General Samuel P. Heintzelman, which occurred in Washington City, on Saturday morning last, in the seventy-fifth year of his age.

"He was born in this borough, in the house now owned by Dr. C. J.

Snively, on the 30th of September, 1805, graduated at West Point, and entered the army in 1826. He served in the Mexican War in 1847-48, as a Captain, and was brevetted Major for gallantry at Huanantla.

"From 1849 to 1855 he served in the Indian wars, and in May, 1861, was made Colonel of the Seventeenth Infantry, and being appointed Brigadier General of Volunteers took part in the first battle of 'Bull Run,' where he was wounded. In the Virginia Peninsular campaign of 1862 he commanded the Third Army Corps.

"After the battle of Williamsburg he was promoted to a Major Generalship and commanded the Third and Fourth Army Corps at the battle of Fair Oaks and in the 'Seven days' fight.'

"He was in the second battle of Bull Run and in several other engagements. He resumed the command of the Seventeenth Infantry in 1865, and in February, 1869, was retired from active service, with the full rank of Major General. On Monday his remains were removed to Buffalo, N. Y., and on Tuesday morning were interred with military honors at that place.

"Shortly after the close of the Civil War, General Heintzelman, in company with his daughter, visited this borough, and again in the autumn of 1878; on the latter occasion he made a short address to the citizens from the steps of Dr. Snively's residence."

On December 30, 1882, in the institution of Post No. 300, of the G. A. R., in his native town he was also honored by having the organization named "General Heintzelman Post," and one of the conspicuous features of their display is a large portrait of the General which adorns their walls.

Minutes of February Meeting.

Lancaster, Pa., Feb. 7, 1913.

The Lancaster County Historical Society held its monthly meeting on Friday evening in the Public Library building. In the absence of President Steinman Mr. F. R. Diffenderffer presided. Miss Clark acted as recording secretary.

The librarian, Miss Bausman, reported a large number of valuable donations received since the last meeting. They included the sofa, book cases, books, desk, pictures and manuscripts pertaining to the Civil War from the Samuel L. Hartman estate; birthday sonnets from D. B. Landis, and a number of very rare old papers from Mrs. Ebert, of York. Among them was a reference to a dispute between Alexander Scott, of Hempfield, Lancaster county, and L. Murray, of Lancaster, in which Gen. Hand figured. Another contribution was an old bill for medical services performed by Dr. Edward Hand for a Mr. Pedan. Mr. Christian E. Metzler, of Boston, contributed a number of old documents. Other books and pamphlets added to the library were as follows:

Bound Volumes—Journals of the Continental Congress, Vol. XIX (by purchase); Library of Congress, Check List of American Eighteenth Century Newspapers; Library of Congress, Report for 1912; Smithsonian Institution, Annual Report for 1911; "Messages and Proclamations of Wisconsin War Governors" and "Service with the Third Wisconsin Infantry," from the Wisconsin History Commission; catalogue of newspaper files in Library of the State Historical Society of Wisconsin; "Camping for Boys," from the author, H. W. Gibson, Boston, Mass.

Magazines and Pamphlets—Annals of Iowa; American Philosophical Society; American Catholic Historical Society Records; Transactions of the Historical Society of Berks County, 1910-1911; Bulletin of the Chester County Historical Society, 1908; Bulletin of the Chester County Historical Society, exercises in memory of Thomas Buchanan Read and Bayard Taylor; German American Annals; "The Neville Memorial," services and addresses, from Dr. Theodore Diller, Pittsburgh; Annual Meeting of the Susquehanna County Historical Society and Free Library Association; The Coin Shilling of Massachusetts Bay, Address delivered before American Antiquarian Society, from Yale University; International Conciliation, 2 numbers; Library of Congress Publications, issued since 1897; Linden Hall Echo; Penn Germania, 2 numbers; annual reports, 1912, catalogue, 1912-1913, from Columbia University; Bulletin of Carnegie Library, Pittsburgh; Bulletin of Grand Rapids Public Library; Bulletin of New York Public Library.

Mr. Walter Bausman, of New York, was elected to membership, and the names of the following were proposed: Miss Cora C. Curry, of No. 1020 Monroe street, N. W., Washington, D. C.; Robert L. Gerhart, 236 North Duke street, Lancaster, and Samuel R. Slaymaker, of this city.

The paper of the evening was contributed by A. K. Hostetter, who had as the subject of a most entertaining contribution "Major General Samuel Peter Heintzelman," who had a long and brilliant career in the United States Army. His home was in Mannheim, and fitting honor was paid his memory at the recent centennial exercises there. Mr. Hostetter went into his subject most exhaustively, and the result is a paper of rare value to the Historical Society.

There was a discussion of General Heintzelman participated in by Dr. J. B. Lincoln and others.

The History of Cedar Hill Seminary.

To recall the active days of old "Cedar Hill," as a Seminary, these are indeed very rapidly fading away, in the memory of even the oldest inhabitants of Mount Joy and vicinity; and the desolate evidences of decay at this one-time seat of local learning, are but mute reminders of a by-gone era. The history of this institution has been perhaps meager, yet of interest withal; and the writer now gladly gives his portion, with other data, for the present paper, prepared in part, also, by him, for a new history of Mount Joy and its surroundings, issued by the Centennial Publishing Company of that place.

After the time of Pennsylvania's Legislative Act of 1822, providing for the education of children at public expense in the city and incorporated boroughs of Lancaster county, there were also established a number of academies. These private schools gave opportunity for a more general education than could be secured by moderate State aid. "Mount Joy, by vote, accepted the terms of the school law of 1834 in the year of 1842."

The First Location.

Prior to the later location of Cedar Hill, a school was evidently conducted by Rev. Dodge and held in a long, low, stone building on what is at present the Christian Seitz farm. No part of the original structure is now standing, according to information available.

This school was in existence about 1836-7.

The building for Cedar Hill Seminary was commenced in 1837, at the extreme eastern end of Mount Joy, near the south side of Little Chiques creek, at what is now known as "The Dell," between the Pennsylvania Railroad and Mount Joy trolley tracks. The place was occupied at the beginning of 1839, by its principal, Rev. Nehemiah Dodge, A.M., who became known as a very active character and able teacher. The seminary succeeded well in its educational advantages, and was attended during its best periods "by young ladies from eleven different States."

Early Printed History.

From among the different Lancaster county histories, Rupp makes this mention: "The Young Ladies' Lyceum Institute"—Rev. N. Dodge, A.M., principal—located on the banks of the Chiquesalunga creek, near the village of Mountjoy—is, perhaps, as regards accommodations—kind attention to the wants of the pupils—facility for acquiring a competent and thorough knowledge of all the various branches and accomplishments taught at similar institutions, if not superior to, at least surpassed by none other in the country." Rupp's book of 1844 refers to the Cedar Hill Seminary; and in terming it an "Institute," that astute historian had somewhat in mind another private school (for boys), called the Mount Joy Institute, established about the same time, 1838, by J. H. Brown as principal, which "was not long in operation."

A Seminary For Females.

Rev. Dodge conducted Cedar Hill as a female seminary until about the middle sixties, when the school was closed on account of the drawn-out Civil War. Southern parents in particular kept their daughters away, and the previously prosperous institution went down, owing somewhat to the prevailing prejudices incident to that stirring period.

A writer in the Mount Joy Herald of the early eighties gave this description of Cedar Hill at that time: "It is surrounded by a grove of cedar and forest trees, making a most delightful and beautiful place. In antebellum days a flourishing female seminary existed here, which had a national reputation, and for many years it was a fountain from which issued many streams to make glad hundreds of happy households, North and South. Many noted persons from the South used to visit the place. I remember when Senator Berrian and family, from South Carolina, spent their summer vacation here." A further description of the near-by Chiqua-Salunga creek at Cedar Hill was published with the above, in the Landisville Vigil of 1883.

Rev. Professor Dodge, founder of the Female Seminary, was born in Londonderry, N. H., September 10, 1794, and died at Cedar Hill, July 25, 1876. His body was buried at Old Donegal Church Cemetery, this county, and his monument bears this appropriate quotation: "He opened his mouth with wisdom; and on his tongue was the law of kindness."

A Change in Management.

For some years the Seminary building was idle for school purposes. In 1874 Prof. David Denlinger, an educator of celebrity and reputation, who had previously gone through some similar experiences in keeping an institution on its feet during the war (having also had considerable patronage from the South), came to Mount Joy from New Berlin, Union county, this State, where he had taught females only, and reopened the Dodge school under the last name of Cedar Hill Seminary, admitting both sexes from thence forward. Professor Denlinger had charge of the changed institution for some years, while the property belonged to the estate of the founder.

Some Reflections.

After a time Cedar Hill was again closed. The building met the fate of a fire and stood spectral like in its ruins; while the surroundings thickened with growing trees and wild weeds. The young folks of Mount Joy borough, in late years, often jaunted to its environs to pass away love's young dreams, while other folks picnicked there. In yet more recent seasons many a "hobo" has rested his weary bones in the shade of the seminary surroundings. Green young cedar trees are now striving for mastery, quite close to the walls of the once classic halls, by the tall trees which are now overtopping the scenes where Professors Dodge and Denlinger did their personal share for the education of noble daughters and sons, of a fair portion of this country.

Professor Denlinger removed to and lived at Manchester, Carroll county, Md., where he successfully continued the Irving Institute for probably ten years. He died about eighteen years since, and his remains are interred in the Henry Eberle Cemetery at Mount Joy. His son, J. W. Denlinger, Esq., practices law in Lancaster city at the present time.

A Romantic Tradition.

A correspondent of a Mount Joy paper in 1883, under the initials of "J. E. C.," gave a very graphic sketch of Cedar Hill's romantic Indian tradition, in which a young brave by the name of Chiqua courted a handsome maiden called Salunga. The story, in detail, winds up by a most tragic termination of their young lives at Chiques Rock, on the Susquehanna, close by the mouth of the Little Chiques creek.

This tradition has been printed in modified form on different occasions since then in the Landisville Vigil, Ellis & Evans' Lancaster County History, and in earlier proceedings of our own Historical Society.

Briefly commenting on the first flowery sketch of this tradition, I would state that the Susquehanna is not "nearly two miles wide" at Chiques Rock, where the Herald author also stated the river was "nearly two hundred feet below" the top of its most prominent rocky point. Similar romantic stories have been handed down from generation to generation, based on the natural wonders bordering at other winding, rock-ribbed streams of this county; and, as time goes on, we shall not lack for artistic, sentimental backgrounds to our printed sketches of local prose and poetry.

Early Lancaster Artists.

The following sketches were prepared in connection with the recent exhibition of Lancaster county portraiture:

Ferdinand Huck.

Lancaster is one of the oldest inland cities in the United States, and has naturally developed into a settlement of conservative family life and a Mecca of valued family possessions. These possessions, especially the family portraits, prove that Lancaster is far from the matter-of-fact place it is generally thought to be, and that the people of Lancaster have always possessed the sense of beauty and a feeling and love for the best in art.

The first artist in Lancaster of whom there is any record is Ferdinand Hück, who came from Mayence, Germany, in 1729.

Several body water-colors and two oils are in existence, one a small portrait of himself, painted on wood, and the other an original conception of the Crucifixion. This was painted for the Catholic Mission, established in 1741, saved from fire and used as a mural decoration for the stone edifice that arose above the ashes of the primitive early building.

Probably there were too many Indians about Lancaster at that time for Ferdinand to pursue the Goddess Art without interference. He moved to Baltimore, where his descendants now live and prosper.

It is only a matter of conjecture, but an interesting point for genealo-

Adam Mortimer Lightner.

Adam Mortimer Lightner, a young American artist, was born in the year 1814. He was the son of Nathaniel Free Lightner and Maria Carpenter Ellmaker Lightner, who was a daughter of Peter Baker Ellmaker and Susanna Carpenter Ellmaker, of Salisbury township, Lancaster county. He received his education at John Beck's Academy, Lititz, Lancaster county. At an early age he showed great talent as a portrait painter. His father sent him to Italy to perfect himself in the art of portrait painting, where he took lessons from the first masters of Italy. While in that country he was taken with hemorrhages, and, after his return to America, lived but a year, dying apparently a young man in his twenty-sixth year, October 11, 1840. He is awaiting the glorious resurrection morning with his father and mother in "Christ Episcopal Churchyard," Leacock township.

Minutes of the March Meeting.

Lancaster, March 7, 1913.

The Lancaster County Historical Society held its monthly meeting on Friday evening. Mr. F. R. Diffenderfer, one of the vice presidents, was in the chair. Miss Martha B. Clark was secretary pro tem.

Miss Bausman reported a long list of donations, chief of which was the following list of old newspapers, the gift of the Mechanics' Library Association:

Neue Unpartheyische Lancaster Zeitung, 1787 to 1793; ("The first German paper printed in the city that was destined to live beyond the probationary period"); the Maryland Journal and Baltimore Advertiser, January 3, 1792; Der Lancaster Correspondent, "No. 1, 1799, May 25th, Saturday, issued by Christian Jacob Huetter on King street, 2nd door from Market"—1800, 1801, 1802, 1803—(file complete); Journal of the Senate of the Republic of Pennsylvania—"which took its beginning in Lancaster, Wednesday, November 5, 1800, eleventh volume, printed by John Albright Co., Prince street, Lancaster;" Der American Staatsbote, 1800, 1803, 1804, "printed in Lancaster by John Albrecht"; New York Herald, 1803 to 1806; the Philadelphia Daily Aurora, August 5, 1805, to September, 1806; Philadelphia United States Gazette, semi-weekly, and Daily True American, August, 1805 to September, 1806; Daily Philadelphia Political Commercial Register, parts of 1805, 1806, 1807, 1808; Lancaster Journal, 1807, to 1816, 1818, 1819; Der Volksfreund, 1806, 1808, to 1814, "printed in Lancaster by William Hamilton, West King street, next door to Wilson's Hotel"; also a German Bible, 1819, printed by John Bar, Lancaster.

The other donations were as follows:

Bound Volumes—Twenty-six volumes from the State Library, including State Reports and Histories of Civil War Regiments; four volumes from the New York Historical Society collections of that society; Journals of the Continental Congress, Volume XX (by purchase); memorial volume of Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania F. and A. M., independence celebration of 125th anniversary.

Magazines and pamphlets—Annals of Iowa; Linden Hall Echo; Classified Catalogue of the Carnegie Library, Pittsburgh, Part II; Forty-first Annual Report of the Grand Rapids Public Library; Bulletins of Carnegie Library, Pittsburgh; Grand Rapids Public Library; New York Public Library.

A vote of thanks was extended for the valuable donations.

The following were elected to membership: Samuel R. Slaymaker, Miss Cora C. Curry, Robert L. Gerhard. These names were proposed: Charles B. Keller, Walter C. Hager, Willis Rohrer, Rev. H. K. Denlinger.

Following the business session Mr. A. K. Hostetter read an interesting sketch of Rev. Tobias Wagner, an early pioneer minister of Pennsylvania. The data was gathered by Mr. Hostetter in preparing his excellent article on Major General Heintzelman, read at the February meeting of the Society.

AN EARLY CANAL PROJECT

The writer's interest in the early waterways and inland navigation of Lancaster county was somewhat quickened recently by reading an unpublished letter, written at Harrisburg, August 12, 1824, to Richard B. McCabe, of Huntingdon, by Persifor Frazer, of the notable family whose name he bore, conspicuous aforetime in Delaware and Chester counties, and later in Philadelphia. In one paragraph of local personal interest he said:

"George B. Porter, Esq., passed through this place two or three days since on his way to Lancaster. Previous to his arrival here he had been appointed Adjutant General, to succeed Col. Carr. He will, I think, make an excellent officer; and his appointment, in this section of the country, appears to be highly approved of. The Goddess of fortune, or rather of office, appears to bestow her favors with a liberal hand on descendants of the brave General Porter."

It will be remembered this was the Porter who married a daughter of Samuel Humes, and became the father of Rose Porter, later Shissler, of Galena, Ill., and of Humes Porter. He was made territorial Governor of Michigan, and after his death his widow built an edifice on North Duke street, now the Iris Club house. About the same time his brother, David Rittenhouse Porter, was Governor of Pennsylvania from January 15, 1839, to January 21, 1845. Meantime another brother, James Madison Porter, of Easton, Pa., was Secretary of War under President Tyler. A son of Gov. Porter is the General Horace A. Porter, of military and diplomatic fame, Gen. Grant's chief of staff and one-time Ambassador to France; he resides in New York. Another was the famous Judge William A. Porter, of the Philadelphia Bench and Bar; his son, William W. Porter, was one of the first Judges of the Superior Court of Pennsylvania. Verily, as Fraser wrote, "Fortune favored the family."

Another and more significant paragraph in the same epistle reads as follows:

"As respects the canal commissioners, I, think you will not have the pleasure of seeing them before the latter part of next summer. We had almost concluded here that they had been drowned in some of the rivulets of Chester county; for it was more than a month before we heard anything of them. Within a few days past we have ascertained that they are in the neighborhood of Churchtown, Lancaster county, progressing in their surveys. They have found an abundance of water on the summit level, and believe that a canal can be made the whole way from Philadelphia to the Susquehanna in the neighborhood of Harrisburg, at an average expense of $1,500 per mile. The summit level proves to be no less than sixty-five miles in extent. All that is now wanting to ensure canals in every direction through the State is—money.

"Political—Nearly all for Jackson here—A few for Adams—and three for Crawford!"

The idea of a canal on the ridge lands about Churchtown reads a trifle ludicrous now; and if an estimated cost of $1,500 per mile was calculated to stagger the financiers of the Commonwealth, what would have happened had a project been started that would to the infant State of that day been relatively commensurate with the Federal scheme at Panama?

And yet there is extended historic justification for the survey then apparently making in the region of Churchtown, Honeybrook and Morgantown, for a canal to connect the Schuylkill and Delaware rivers with a the waters of the Susquehanna, at a point the line of which would traverse the Churchtown country. Swank, in his "Progressive Pennsylvania," traces the conception back to William Penn, and pays tribute to one of our indefatigable members when he says: "In the 'Proposals for a Second Settlement' on the Susquehanna river William Penn, in 1690, says that a 'way' by land had been 'laid out' between the Delaware and the Susquehanna rivers 'at least three years ago,' and that communication between this proposed settlement and the settlements already made on the Delaware would 'not be hard to do by water by the benefit of the river Schuylkill, for a branch of that river lies near a branch that runs into the Susquehanna river and is the common course of the Indians with their skins and furs into our parts.' In these words Penn certainly indicates French creek and Conestoga creek as the branches which could be utilized in uniting the Susquehanna and Schuylkill rivers. His 'way' was undoubtedly a road from the mouth of French creek to a point near the mouth of the Conestoga. H. Frank Eshleman, of Lancaster, has made this matter clear. To Penn belongs the credit for first suggesting, as early as 1690, the project for continuous water transportation from the Delaware to the Susquehanna, but he did not specifically suggest the building of a canal."

Henry S. Tanner, in his "Description of the Canals and Railroads of the United States" (1840), says that "application was made to the Provincial Legislature for authority to open a water communication between the Schuylkill and the Susquehanna rivers, and in the year 1762 a survey with a view to this object was effected, by which its practicability was satisfactorily demonstrated." Tanner gives no further particulars of the alleged "survey," but other writers, without submitting any proof, say that it was made by David Rittenhouse and Dr. William Smith in 1762.

This survey was likely made about 1769; and ran further to the north, passing through what is now Lebanon county. Philadelphia, jealous of the trade which Baltimore drew from Pennsylvania, as the Susquehanna drained toward the Chesapeake, was ever alert to the advantage of joining the waters of the State in some scheme of transportation which led to the metropolis and entry port of our Commonwealth. Bolles, in his "Pennsylvania, Province and State," says:

"In those days transportation under the most favorable conditions was expensive, and the carriage of goods around the peninsula and up the bay to Philadelphia was a costly charge. To overcome Baltimore's advantage, it was proposed to build a canal from the Susquehanna to the Schuylkill, and to improve 'the navigation of all rivers so far as they led towards our capital city.' This was just before the Revolution; and many were desirous of building a canal through the heart of the country. The contest with Great Britain soon overshadowed every other, and business rivalry was forgotten."

Later there were revivals of the scheme; surveys and plans and legislative movements toward its actualization were authorized in 1825. The incoming of the railway superseded all thought of a canal on the Churchtown plateau; but generations later witnessed the locomotive climb the slopes of the Welsh Mountain, and the route from Lancaster to Philadelphia, via New Holland, Beartown, Honeybrook and Downingtown, is very little longer than the main line. Even if the large conception of 1825 had been realized, it would have been of brief local advantage, as the packet and barge, the towpath and mule power, lasted only a little while longer as elements of modern transportation.

AN ARTISTIC AFTERMATH

I am indebted to Mr. John D. Chalfant, artist, of Wilmington, Del., for an opportunity to see a catalogue of the "First Annual Exhibition of the Society of Artists of the United States." which was held in Philadelphia, under the auspices of what is now the Academy of Fine Arts, in 1811. It was a notable and significant event in the history of the arts in this then new country. The title page of this rather modest pamphlet of forty-seven pages bears the quotation from Pope, "Dare to have sense yourselves." It was printed by Tho. L. Plowman, and sold at the reasonable price of twenty-five cents. By comparison with the recent splendid publication of our local portraiture exhibition, it presents a rather shabby appearance; but in the list of names, then perhaps obscure, but since become illustrious. It exhibits the work of eminent geniuses.

There were shown at this display 127 works of American artists and among the names since become familiar are those of Rembrandt and James Peale, Wurtmiller, Sully and Stuart. Raphael, Anna and Maria Peale all had works on exhibition. The Birches, Thomas and William, figure in this catalogue, and Denis A. Volozan seems to have been a prominent contemporary artist of classical subjects. Benjamin West's "King Lear" and "Ophelia" were there. The most numerous contributor to the occasion was F. Guy, whose landscapes made up nearly a sixth of the whole collection, and they were all "for sale." There were several works of W. Broombridge. The feature, however, of special local interest, and recalled now with peculiar timeliness, is the fact that Jacob Eichholtz, then an "Associate Artist," appears in this early exposition with three pictures; one of these, a "Portrait of a Gentleman," was, of course, the early Nicholas Biddle picture of that period, and likely the one that Eichholtz carried with him to Boston, when he went there to interview the great Stuart. That picture, as I have heretofore reported, remains in Philadelphia, on the walls of the home of Mr. Biddle's daughter, who has been deceased since our portraiture exposition was held. Her nephew has had it carefully restored by Wilkinson, the skilled artist and finisher, and a recent view which I had of it displayed remarkable freshness and brilliancy of color, the special Eichholtz red coming out in splendid form. It would be of interest to know who was the subject of the other "Portrait of a Gentleman," then exhibited by Eichholtz, as well as his third picture, "Innocence," which was in all probability one of his own children and possibly may be identified with some of the present possessions of his work in his own family. It is gratifying to know that even at the early day and stage of his art development he had as many as three pictures in this limited collection.

Besides the work of American artists, this first annual exhibition included about 200 works of foreign artists, ancient and modern, and already in Philadelphia or other parts of the country there were owned landscapes by Teniers, portraits by Reubens, animal pictures by Paul Potter, numerous specimens of the Dutch artists as well as Rembrandts, Van Dykes, Watteaus, Titians, Gordaens, Anglica Kauffmans, Jaen Steens, Ostades, and others, upon whom time has set its approval and enormously heightened their values.

Since the publication in the transactions of this Society of the recollections of Eichholtz and the partial catalogue of his works, I have discovered there are quite a number of others extant, which were not then known and recorded. It goes without saying that the history of his life and works, published by this society, has quickened interest in and an appreciation of him, as well as much enhanced the market value of his productions.

For example, a family portrait has turned up in Denver, Colorado. It is owned by the widow of Leonard Eichholtz, who died a year or two ago. It bears the date 1820. The subject is Henry Eichholtz, who was a brother of the artist. He moved from Lancaster to Downingtown, and there kept the hotel which is adjacent to the Pennsylvania Railroad. He was the father of Leonard Eichholtz, who went to Colorado in the early sixties. The portrait is half-length, looking left.

In the possession of J. Lane Reed, of Dayton, Ohio, there are three Eichholtz portraits. One is that of George Ford, born 1773, died 1843; the second of Mary Ann Elizabeth Hull Ford, born 1770, died 1845, grandparents of the owner. The third is that of Henry Robert Reed, his father, dated 1816. Mr. Ford's portrait was painted in 1812, and is, therefore, one of the earliest of the artist's works.

A very considerable cluster of Eichholtz portraits and the relations of a notable Lancaster family have been traced to and through Mr. Edward S.

Sayres, a prominent member of the Philadelphia Bar. He is a great-grandson of Samuel Humes, who appears in the Eichholtz ledger as one of the artist's liberal local patrons. Miss Hamilton, of St. Paul, who is a kinswoman of the Humes family, has four Eichholtz portraits, viz., of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Humes; of Dr. Samuel Humes, a son, and of another son, William Humes, who married Miss Harriet Church, of Philadelphia, and was a member of the company of State Fencibles in the War of 1812, commanded by Hartman Kuhn, a Philadelphia descendant of Adam Simon Kuhn, a conspicuous figure in old Lancaster and foremost in Old Trinity.

John Humes, of Philadelphia, merchant and Register of Wills, born in Lancaster, son of Samuel and Mary Hamilton; sitting, facing left.

All these portraits, excepting the one of Mrs. John Humes, which lacks vigor, have always been considered very fine.

In note ix, page 30, of the Eichholtz biography, is a letter from a Legislative Committee of Delaware, directing a painting for the State Capitol of

Col. John Gibson, in action at Erie. I have learned that this work was executed as proposed and furnished the Delaware Commonwealth, and remains now, after more than eighty years, one of the art treasures of the State House.

According to the Delaware Legislative Journal, a joint resolution to have this portrait printed was adopted by the General Assembly February 6, 1822. The subject was suggested by the fact that Colonel James Gibson was a native of Delaware, and fell in defense of his country at the memorable sortie at Lake Erie, September 17, 1814. The committee appointed under the resolution was somewhat tardy, and the matter was renewed on February 16, 1829, when a new committee was appointed and $120 appropriated for the purpose. No further record is made of the committee's work or report, but the picture was procured and paid for. The portrait is three-quarter length, in uniform with sword, and is in fairly good condition. Gibson was born in Sussex county, Delaware. He joined the regular army and was absent from his native Commonwealth most of his life.

The other day a portrait, obscured with the dust of ages and despoiled by cellar damp, was sold at a Philadelphia auction room, to which it had been brought by a colored drayman who rescued it from the basement of an abandoned house. A restorer and fancier of fine arts discerned in it some merit and bought it for a song. The restoration enhanced its likeness and value; the purchaser became certain it was an auto-portrait of Eichholtz. He studied our biography and catalogue and was convinced; and when he compared it with the features of a descendant of Eichholtz he was certain. A wealthy connoisseur and art patron dropped into his shop, saw the picture, and, having been led to an appreciation of the supposed author, without further authentication, bought it at a price three-fold as much as Eichholtz ever was paid for any production. Its genuineness is yet to be established, as the family has no trace of this newly-found portrait.

That the general influence of the portrait exhibition led to a local stimulation of interest in the fine arts has already been manifested in many ways. A remarkable illustration is furnished by a letter sent to a gentleman interested in this subject by a citizen of the lower end of Lancaster county, who travels extensively through the lower end and adjoining parts of York county and Maryland, and, therefore, has special opportunities to become acquainted with the art treasures of that locality. He writes as follows to a sympathetic friend:

"I am in touch with the owner of some fine old paintings, among them one each of Henry and Mary Stewart. these are by M. Angelo. they are genuine I wish to bring them to the notice of Morgan & Carnegie. can you put me wise in the matter? if you can think I can make it worth your while to do so."

Whether his reference to the Stuarts involves the royal house of England seems to be a little uncertain, but the fact that the portraits are authenticated as the work of M. Angelo certainly makes them worthy the attention of Mr. Carnegie, now that America's foremost patron of the fine arts has passed away.

Patterson-Andrews Genealogy

About 1840 James Patterson Andrews, M. D., commenced a compilation of a genealogical register of the descendants of James and Mary (Montgomery) Patterson, founders of the Little Britain, Lancaster county, branch of the Patterson family, and also of the descendants of the Chester county branch of the Andrews family, of which Widow Andrews was founder; the two families being early and closely connected by marriage, Dr. Andrews continued his register up to the time of his death, which occurred in 1875. Of recent years George M. Black, of Oak Park, Ill., of the fourth generation of Pattersons and the fifth generation of Andrewses, has been making an effort to continue the lines of work with the view of putting the whole pamphlet into book form, when as near complete as possible.

Prompt assistance is asked of those knowing themselves to be descended from Widow Andrews or James and Mary (Montgomery) Patterson.

The subject is one that should appeal to a large number of persons in our county, especially resident in the Lower End, where both strains of the family were numerous and influential. I take it the Colerain and Little Britain and the Chester county Pattersons were distinct from the family of the same name who so largely peopled the Donegal region and left their deep imprint in that locality. James Patterson, the elder, at the age of twenty, came from his native county of Antrim, Ireland, to Little Britain, in 1728. His bride, Mary Montgomery, followed him from the North of Ireland three or four years later, and married him. Widow Andrews and her children came later and settled in Chester county. Her daughter, Frances, married Robert Gardner and their daughter, Letitia, married James Montgomery Patterson, son of James and Mary. Hence the many Wilson, Andrews, Ewing, Shippen, Clendennin, Neiper, Black and White notable families of lower Lancaster county. The illustrious Ramsays—David, doctor, statesman and historian; William, the divine; and Nathaniel, soldier and Treasury official—were nephews of one of the women of this Patterson-Andrews line. Robert Fulton, the inventor, through his lineage from the Blacks and Smiths, was collaterally related to this family. Robert Fulton, the elder, married his cousin, Mary Smith, daughter of Joseph.

John Black, father of the present genealogist of this family, was born in Chester county, in 1798. His mother, Hannah Ross Black, was full cousin of Robert Fulton, of steamboat fame. Her mother was Isabella Smith, sister of Mary Smith, mother of Fulton. They were daughters of Joseph Smith, born in Ireland, 1704, came to Chester county, 1726, with a brother, John, and sister, Mary, who married William Fulton. They were grandparents of Robert, the inventor.

Biographers became confused in the two Mary Smiths, and many mistakes have occurred in writing the family lines. John (1686), Mary (?), and Joseph (1704), were born in County Monaghan, Ireland, children of John Macdonald Smith, born in County Antrim, 1655. His parents came from Scotland, and were named Macdonald. The name of Smith was given to John by William of Orange, at or about the time of the battle of the Boyne, from an incident that occurred wherein the King's horse cast a shoe, which was replaced by John Macdonald. The King inquired of the man his name, and was told Macdonald. The King told him his name ought to be Macdonald the smith. The remark was heard by some of Macdonald's neighbors, who dubbed him with the name, and the Smith name was adopted by the family, and Smith it has remained.

MINUTES OF APRIL MEETING

Lancaster, Pa., April 4, 1913.

The Lancaster County Historical Society held its monthly meeting tonight in the Smith Public Library building. President Steinman was in the chair, and Miss Martha B. Clark acted as secretary pro tem. The attendance was good.

The librarian, Miss Bausman, announced the following donations received during March:

Magazines and Pamphlets—Viceroy of New Spain, from the University of California; Kittochtinny Historical Society, Volume VII; American Catholic Historical Society, Records; Lebanon County Historical Society; Pennsylvania-German; Linden Hall Echo; Two Oldest Congregations of the United Presbyterian Church; Bulletins of New York Public Library and Carnegie Library, Pittsburgh; Volume 1 (unbound) of the Lancaster County Historical Society Papers, from F. R. Diffenderffer; number of copies of old newspapers, mostly of Lancaster publications, beginning with 1794, also several old documents, from F. R. Diffenderffer; number of miscellaneous pamphlets from Dr. R. K. Buehrle; two political banners of the Buchanan campaign, from Fred S. Pyfer.

A vote of thanks was extended the donors.

On motion it was decided to purchase a copy of the Herr Genealogy for $5.

Miss Bausman, the librarian, brought up the question of securing an additional room in the building for the use of the society, and on motion a committee composed of F. R. Diffenderfer, A. K. Hostetter and Miss Bausman, was appointed to confer with the library management in reference to the matter.

The name of Charles Ezra Bowman was proposed for membership, and the following were duly elected: Charles B. Keller, Lancaster; Walter C. Hager, Esq., Lancaster; Willis Rohrer, Lancaster, and Rev. H. T. Denlinger, 360 West Twenty-eighth street, New York City.

Mr. W. U. Hensel, who has been active in promoting the previous very successful celebrations, submitted a proposal for "Our Next Popular Celebration," as follows:

The suggestion has been made—originating with one of our most active and interested members, Judge Landis—that the annual event of this society, in the nature of a public and popular celebration, shall have this year for its theme "Lancaster County in the War for the Union," centering around the personality of our most distinguished soldier of that period, John Fulton Reynolds, and comprising in its scope the erection of some memorial to him. There are many good reasons for favorable consideration of this idea:

First—We have celebrated Lancaster county in the War of the Revolution; and have commemorated our great inventor, the German Mennonite settlements, the Quaker anti-slavery influence. Now, the position taken by our community and its people in the great epoch of preserving the Union of States and establishing National Sovereignty is a subject of equal significance with any of these and quite fit to found upon it a popular celebration.

Second—Reynolds was native to our soil and city. His family lived here for generations and sprang from that French Huguenot race, which though comparatively few in number and intermingled almost inseparably with other strains, has been large in influence and persistent in its characteristics.

Third—Appointed to the United Military Academy by a Congressman of this district, who was the only Pennsylvanian to ever become President of the United States, he finished his course with honors, discharged responsible duties for fifteen years of peace, fought gallantly and won promotion in the Mexican war; traversed the continent in military expedition when the path to the Pacific was yet unfixed; left the commandantship at West Point for field service at the outbreak of the war, discharged his duties brilliantly at every stage, until, assigned by Meade to fatal distinction, he fell as a hero wearing battle-harness in the first day's fight—early at that time, says Count Paris, historian of the Civil War, the most promising soldier of the army of the Potomac.

Fourth—The decisive battle of Gettysburg was the only engagement of the war on the soil of a free State. The incidents of the Confederate invasion directly touched the border of Lancaster; the thunder of the guns was heard in this city; and our people were quick to respond to the call for relief. It was the supreme occasion of the whole war to touch their sympathies and quicken their activities.

Finally—The erection of another outdoor and ornamental memorial to the illustrious dead of Lancaster, if related to some eminently fit subject like the one proposed, will likely lead to others of the kind. Williamson Park has been decorated with the Hand tablet. The Long and Buchanan parks, either of them would afford a noble site and picturesque background for such a marker; while the new Boulevard or Parkway under construction in the West End would afford numerous spaces for the location of a memorial, whether modest or elaborate.

I, therefore, move that a committee of three, to be appointed by the chair, consider this subject and report at the next meeting upon the practicability of the Society this year commemorating, by a popular celebration and enduring marker, one of the historic events or characters of Lancaster county.

President Steinman will, in the near future, appoint the committee of three, and active work in planning for the big event will be begun.

Mr. Hensel read three short but very interesting papers. One of them was on the subject, "To and Through Churchtown By Canal," referring to an early project to connect Harrisburg and Philadelphia by a waterway. Another paper gave the Patterson-Andrews genealogy, while the third was entitled, "An Artistic Aftermath," giving some facts about the "First Annual Exhibition of the Society of Artists of the United States," held in Philadelphia in 1811. Among the exhibitors was our own Jacob Eichholtz.

Early Local Historical Items.

In the proceedings of the Lancaster County Historical Society for the month of October, 1907, and for the month of December, 1910, may be found lists of certain items of early Lancaster county history gleaned from the "American Weekly Mercury," the earliest newspaper of Pennsylvania, beginning 1719, and ending its career in 1746. These items of greater or lesser importance furnish a certain department of the historical facts of our county, in its earlier days, that have value worth preserving. This newspaper is very rare, and it is believed that our Society ought to have a record of its early facts.

The article of December, 1910, brings the "items" down to 1738, and we shall now proceed with a narration of the same down to the discontinuance of the paper.

It is evident that the Proprietors had great difficulty in collecting their quit rents. In the issue of the Mercury of June 28, 1739, there is one item stating that inhabitants for several years past have neglected to appear at the place fixed in their patents, or by an Act of Assembly, to pay their quit rents. The item continues and says that inasmuch as the proprietor is agreed to take paper money for all lands patented before 1732, that the people ought to appreciate it and pay more promptly. Notice is then given that Richard Peters, the secretary of the Proprietor, among other places, would sit at Lancaster, in the county of Lancaster, from the 7th to the 17th of October, where all persons who are one or more years in arrears are required to pay their quit rents, and, in default, the receiver of quit rents orders a distress to be made immediately, in pursuance of law.

In the issue of October 4, 1739, the election figures of Pennsylvania are set forth. However, only those of Philadelphia county, Chester county and Bucks county are given, showing how large the vote was for the different candidates. In Lancaster county, only, the names of those elected are mentioned, but the vote is not given, which is very much to be regretted. From the item it appears that the Chester county vote was 866, the Philadelphia county vote 555, and Bucks county 382. These are the highest votes of the officer receiving the highest number at those elections.

In the issue of November 29, 1739, there is an interesting account of the tremendous crowds that Rev. George Whitfield is drawing in Philadelphia and through Chester county, etc. About this time he reached Lancaster county and preached at Pequea, in the Presbyterian Church, but the paper does not have an account of this.

In the issue of March 11, 1740, there is an account of Benjamin Sterrett, going home from a neighbor's house, found dead by a small creek. I mention this only to show that the Sterrett ancestry lived in the western part of Lancaster county, around Donegal, as we all know, and in other sections. Chief Justice Sterrett, of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, descended from them.

In the issue of April 7, 1740, there is a glowing account of the great joy and the public demonstration, upon the declaration of war against Spain. The item sets forth that there was booming of guns and toasts were drunk to the royal family, etc., and a great love shown for England. While this is a narration of the doings in Philadelphia county, it is likely there was considerable excitement in Lancaster county also. It shows the great love that our county and the others had for Great Britain in those early days.

In the same issue, a notice is given to all who are willing to enlist in the important expedition on foot, for taking and plundering the most valuable ports of the Spanish West Indies that they may wait upon certain gentlemen in Philadelphia, and in Chester county and in Bucks county; and as to Lancaster county, directs that they report their names to Andrew Galbreth, Thomas Edwards and Thomas Smith, the late Sheriff, and ———— Cookman. We thus see that, as early as 1740, this county was active in a patriotic way. It is set forth that the gentlemen who were to receive the names of those willing to enlist are strictly prohibited from disclosing the name of any person who desires to have his name concealed. This notice appears in both English and German. I notice that in the Second Series of the Pennsylvania Archives, Volume 2, page 489, under the head of provincial officers and soldiers, we have for Lancaster county Captain Thomas Edwards, December 1, 1744; Lieut. Reese Morgan, December 1, 1744; "Earl Town, Lancaster county, Pennsylvania"—also Captain William Maxwell, Ensign James Wilkins, February 12, 1745-46 (raised in Rathmulen township, Lancaster county).

These were likely employed in King George's War. It appears that some Lancaster county soldiers deserted, as under the date of July 24 it is stated that Thomas Fitzpatrick and others deserted out of the service at Germantown, and are supposed to have gone to Lancaster county.

In the issue of September 18, 1740, we are given a view of how the people were divided on the question of King George's War. It will be remembered that John Wright, the presiding Justice of our Court, greatly opposed Governor Thomas, who was zealous in the war, and the result was that Wright was not reappointed to the Judgeship. The feeling against the war was strong throughout Lancaster county, but in many sections it was very rampant in favor of war. In the issue of the paper just stated it is set forth that, "during the later part of the last week," there was a personal review by the Governor of seven companies of troops raised, who were embarking for the West Indies, and that the troops were very cheerful and eager to go to the front, in order to preserve the honor and welfare of the British nation. It is set forth that these are the first drafts ever made in Pennsylvania. The article then says that it is no uncommon thing in these depraved times to see the Governors abide the reproaches and clamors of the representatives and to undergo pain and anxiety; but to see the Governor, contrary to his own interest, merely from the dictates of duty, loyalty and zeal for the safety and honor of our mother country, bravely encounter hardships, without any assistance from the Legislature, simply to fulfill the request of our Royal Masters, reflects a resolution, a spirit unparalleled in the plantations. It seems that a considerable number of Lancaster county people, especially those bound to service, deserted their masters and joined the armies. Among others we find that a Daniel Hagen ran away from Andrew Caldwell, in Pequea, and others.

In the issue of October 2, 1740, election returns are again given, but the figures are given for Philadelphia county only. The exact vote seems to be 1,822.

In the issue of May 14, 1741, there is a long account of the great public rejoicing throughout Pennsylvania because of the taking and destroying of the forts and castles and the battery in the harbor of Carthagen, and attacking the Spanish admiral with his flag ship and sinking all the rest of the Spanish vessels. The article goes on to state that Pennsylvania contributed loyally to this victory, and there was a great demonstration about the State House. The Governor dined publicly with a large body of gentlemen. The evening was spent largely with rounds of cannon shot. Fifteen of the houses were illuminated. A great bonfire, which was concluded by a whole pipe of Spanish wine, ended the celebration. Lancaster troops were in the army that reduced the Spanish defenses.

In the issue of October 8, 1741, the election returns of Lancaster county are given, as are those of the rest of the counties, but no figures.

Nothing occurred until October 7, 1742, when election returns are again given.

In the issue of June 9, 1743, there is an account of a report that Indian outrages had been committed in Lancaster county; and also in Skohooniaty, or Jeniaty, but it was found that these things were false.

In the issue of April 26, 1744, there is a long account of the murder of John Armstrong, an Indian trader, in or near Lancaster, and two or three of his servants, by some of the Delaware Indians, and the reason for it as set forth, namely, that a Delaware Indian being indebted to Armstrong for some time, Armstrong seized a belt of wampum and a horse for pay—that a few days later this Indian and five others met Armstrong and his servants going from Philadelphia to Lancaster with a wagon load of goods, and demanded the horse back, saying that Armstrong was overpaid; that Armstrong refuses to do this, saying that he was not yet paid in full; that the Indians then turned aside to consult together, and agreed to murder Armstrong and his servants, so that the servants could not reveal the killing—that three of these Indians afterwards disavowed the agreement, but the others stuck to it, and rapidly followed Armstrong, and when they met him, the Indian who wanted the horse gave Armstrong a blow on the head with his tomahawk; that Armstrong struck back with his fist; that the two servants went to Armstrong's assistance; that one of the other Indians then presented his gun and shot one of them and immediately loaded his gun again and shot the other, and that by this time Armstrong was dead. The account goes on to state that they buried Armstrong, and the two men they threw into the creek or river, where the bodies were found afterward by inhabitants. The goods they conveyed three miles further and put them in a hole which they dug in the ground. This account was given by the Indian who shot the man who was taken to the Lancaster jail. The account goes on to say that the king of the Delaware Indians promised to see that they were brought to punishment. There are several accounts of this killing in the Colonial records and other early historical books; but, as this goes into many particulars, that those accounts do not contain, I thought it well to give the substance of this newspaper report.

In the issue of June 21, 1744, an account is given of the Governor of Pennsylvania and the Commissioners from Maryland and Virginia setting out from Philadelphia together for Lancaster, to meet the chiefs of the Five Nations of Indians in the big Indian treaty about to be held in Lancaster to adjust differences that existed between some of the inhabitants of Virginia and a party of the Five Nation Indians, who had some difficulty about a year earlier; and also to strengthen the treaty of friendship between the Five Nations and the people of Pennsylvania. The account sets forth that several of the principal inhabitants of Pennsylvania went with the party from Philadelphia to Lancaster. The far-reaching effect and importance of this great Indian treaty, at which about 550 Indians were present, is recorded in all of the historical books, and I will spend no time upon it. The purposes of the treaty are set out in this newspaper report in a slightly different way from that stated in the historical books.

In the issue of November 15, 1744, it is stated that Mushmelon, the Indian who received the sentence of death on the 5th of November, for the murder of Armstrong and his two men, was executed.

In the issue of May 9, 1745, there is part of a speech made by the Governor to the Assembly, in which he refers to a letter he received from the Governor of Virginia, enclosing the answer of the Catawba Indians to a message he had sent them, pursuant to the Lancaster treaty.

The American Weekly Mercury, from which we have taken the above items, always took the proprietary or aristocratic side in politics. In 1728 Benjamin Franklin began the Pennsylvania Gazette, which generally took the popular side—the side of the Assembly, or lower House, while the Mercury took the side of the Council, the upper house.

We will now give some of the important local items from the Gazette:

The looseness of government and its inefficiency here on the Susquehanna, just about the time our county was organized, appears in an item of the Gazette of April 12, 1729, as follows:

“We hear there are associated together a company of Irish robbers, the chief of whom are said to be one Bennett, whom they call their captain, and one Lynch, whom they call their Lieutenant, with Dobbs, Wiggins and many others, who skulk about this and the neighboring provinces; their villainies being to steal the best horses and load them with the best goods, and carry them off before people's faces, which they lately done in or about Conestoga. It seems their usual practise has been to steal horses from this province and the Jerseys, and carry them to sell in Maryland, Virginia and North Carolina. It is said they began to grow more numerous and had a place of rendezvous where they met to consult how to perpetrate their rogueries and to entertain all like themselves."

The petition asking for the erection of this county filed in Council refers also to the lawless conditions here.

In the issue of January 13, 1730, there is a poem on the different rivers and creeks of Pennsylvania, in which the writer personifies each of the streams and makes them tell their story.

A part of our own river's story is as follows:

"Last Susquehanna, vexed to meet delay, O'er rugged rocks rolled rapid on his way,
Foaming with haste his Ruler to obey,
The Father of the floods began to speak."

* * * * *
"And all attend the banks of Chesapeake," etc.

The poem has no merit, and I did not copy our Susquehanna's own story. Modern poets, however, should not overlook the fact that old Susquehanna has been praised in verse over 180 years, at least.

The character of the neighbors of our ancestors here in the Conestoga Valley, in early days, is shown in the following article of January 13, 1730, in the Gazette (and in January 14, 1729 (30) in the Mercury):

"A very large panther was killed near Conestoga. He had gotten among some swine in the night-time, and the owner, hearing their cries, went out with a couple of dogs, which drove the panther up into a great tree. Ignorant of what it was that went up the tree, he made a fire near it, and left two women to watch while he went to fetch a neighbor that had a gun. They fired at him twice, and the second time broke both his forelegs; upon which, to their great surprise, he made a desperate leap and fell to the ground near the man, who could just get out of his way. The dogs immediately seized him, and with another shot in the head he was dispatched."

Also in the Mercury of January 27, this year, there is an article showing the ruggedness of womanhood in those days. It is as follows:

"At Conestoga, near the beginning of this month, a stout action was performed by Christopher Franciscus. He was gone to bed and soon after heard a great disturbance among his sheep, which made him suddenly rise and send out his dog, himself hastening after to his sheep pen, where a large wolf was alarmed and was leaping over the fence just as the careful husbandman got there. The wolf, being delayed by slipping one foot into a cranny of the fence, the man had time and resolution to take him a strong grasp by the neck with one hand and by a hind leg with the other and so pulled him down; and shifting his hand from the wolf's leg to his ear, and forcing his knee upon the struggling beast's body and there held him, without being bitten, though very hard to prevent, because the trusty dog, worrying at the wolf's hinder part, the more enraged him. Meanwhile the man had not neglected to call for help. He was heard by a daughter of his, who had the courage and faithfulness to bring a knife and relieve her father by letting out the entrails of the wolf." Surely there were Amazons in those early Conestoga days!

A picture of the dangers and hardships of our forefathers here at home is given in the following item, from the Gazette of May 11, 1731:

"We hear from the county of Lancaster that on the 10th of February, one Ed Tadlock was found dead in the woods near Swattarrie Creek, having been missing eleven days. He came from Kent county, and was seeking a place to settle himself and family; but, losing his way, it was thought that he perished in the cold. From Lancaster we also hear that on the 26th of February one James Hendricks, riding in the woods near Susquehanna with his two sons, in pursuit of game, as they passed a narrow path in the bushes, the father's gun, which would fire at half-cock and had no guard to the trigger, went off and shot his son James in the back. Three years ago this boy, in February, killed his cousin, who was hunting turkeys with him."

An article of May 6th discloses the dangers from fires in the woods, etc.:

"From Lancaster county, we hear that on the 18th, the woods being on fire, some people, fearing their fence would be burned, went out to prevent it, and a child following them, wandered among the woods, and being surrounded by fire, the flames seized its clothes and it was burned to death."

In the issue of February 8, 1732, there is an account of the dangers and horrors some of our Conestoga Palatines went through in reaching their new home. The article is as follows:

"There is a letter in town from some Palatines who embarked at Rotterdam in June last in a ship bound for this place, but instead arrived at Martha's Vineyard, an island on the coast of New England—containing an account that the ship, being four and twenty weeks in her passage, their provisions fell short, and in the last eight weeks they had no bread; but a pint of grouts was all the allowance for five persons per day. They ate all the rats and mice they could catch, and the price of a rat was 18d. and of a mouse 6d. and water 6d. a quart. That seven persons died of hunger and thirst in one night; and of 150 passengers, which came on board at Rotterdam, over 100 were miserably starved to death. When at length it pleased God that a sloop should meet them and conducted the ship into Homes-Hole, a harbor of the above-named island. In the first three days after their arrival fifteen more died, who had been reduced so low by famine that it was impossible to recover them. They write further that they think if they had continued at sea three days longer, they should all have died, no one being able to hand another drop of water. But the good people of the island are very charitable to them and do everything in their power to refresh them; so that many who were famished and near death began to revive, but none are yet strong enough to travel."

What was done for their relief appears in an article in the same paper, dated February 22. It is as follows:

"Governor Gordon has been pleased to write a letter to the Governor of Boston, in behalf of the distressed Palatines on Martha's Vineyard as follows:

" 'Sir—On the application of several Germans and others from the Palatines, now inhabiting this province, I am to address you on behalf of their unhappy countrymen, who, after a passage of twenty-four weeks from Rotterdam, are lately arrived at a port in your government, near R. I., as I suppose. The enclosed being an exact translation of a letter from them to a Dutch Minister here, sets forth fully their calamitous circumstances, and the horrid barbarity with which they have been treated by Lohb, the master of the vessel, who seems to have formed a design to destroy them, in order to possess himself of their effects, which are said to have been very considerable, when they embarked. A gentleman of your goodness and humanity cannot but be moved with pity, for the miserable condition of these poor wretches, and with a just indignation against the author of their misfortunes. And as it will be an act of great charity to relieve and protect the first, it will be no less a necessary act of justice to call the last to strict account. That if he cannot acquit himself of what is laid to his charge, he may reap the just reward of his oppression and cruelty.

“I am with much respect, sir, etc.

“ ‘Philadelphia Feb. 9, 1732.’ ”

And in the issue of May 18th we have a brief account of the slow progress of these suffering people on their toilsome journey from Boston to their final home with their brethren here in this land of Pequea and Conestoga.

It is as follows:

“Philadelphia, May 18—Saturday last arrived here 34 Dutch passengers, being those who came into Martha’s Vineyard half starved in December last. They have since been in Boston, where they say the people took them into their houses and used them very kindly, so that many of them were at no charge, all the while they waited for passage; and, moreover, a collection was made among the inhabitants for their relief, by which £200 was gathered and given to them. The captain who brought them from Holland was prosecuted there on their account; but the accusations against him were not made good and he was acquitted and has since arrested those five who signed the letter for damages, and they are forced to remain behind to answer his action. 'Tis said the people who arrived here complain almost as much of being abused by those five, who were the chief persons among them, as they in their letter did of the captain."

It may be that some of our own ancestors were among that desolate body of men and women, fleeing to this land to escape persecution and poverty at home in Europe.

Another picture of the dreadful experiences which ignorant Palatines subjected themselves to in their tedious journey to our land is shown in an item of the same paper of October 19, 1732. It is as follows:

"Sunday last arrived here Captain Tymberton, in 17 weeks from Rotterdam, with 220 Palatines—44 died in the passage. About three weeks ago, the passengers dissatisfied with the length of the voyage, were so imprudent as to make a mutiny, and, being the stronger party, have ever since had the government of the vessel, giving orders from among themselves to the captain and sailors, who were threatened with death in case of disobedience. Thus, having sight of land, they carried the vessel twice backwards and forwards between our capes and Virginia, looking for a place to go ashore, they knew not where. At length they compelled the sailors to cast the anchor near Cape May, and eight of them took the boat by force and went ashore; from whence they have been five days coming up by land to this place, where they found the ship arrived. Those concerned in taking the boat are committed to prison."

Those indeed were times that tried men's souls.

The Early Settlement and History of Little Britain Township, Including Fulton Township

The first survey and grant of lands in Lancaster county was in this township, Little Britain, which included in its early settlement the territory now called Fulton township, and constitutes the extreme southern end of the so-called Southern End of Lancaster county. If we were to define the "Southern End" as it is understood today, or the Lower End, we would say that it was the entire section lying south of the Buck ridge, and bounded on its western boundary by the Susquehanna, touching for ten miles along its southern end the historic Mason and Dixon line, and well-nigh thirty miles of it bordering upon and bounded on the east and southeast by the beautiful Octoraro, and all included now in the townships of Little Britain, Fulton, Colerain and the Drumores. This entire section is too rich in material for history and historical sketches to be covered within the scope of any one paper. Yet it is all so intimately connected, each with the other, as to be hard to separate and give anything like an intelligent story of its earliest settlement. However, I am constrained by the circumstances and the limitations of the paper to confine myself to the original township of Little Britain, which now includes Fulton township, originally a portion of the same. Within its limits and boundaries live the descendants of the people who have probably done more in the making of history for Lancaster county and in bringing its name to the forefront, as the home of patriots, scholars and statesmen, than any other section of like extent or territory within our county's limits. Not only have they made the name of Lancaster county famous throughout the boundaries of our State, but its fame is not even limited within the boundaries of our own nation. It is not my purpose to detail either the history or lives of these most prominent of her men, but, rather, to put into the records of our Society some facts less prominent in the history of this territory, for abler pens and tongues than mine have already sounded the fame of the great men of this section.

It does not seem to be generally known, yet it is a well-established fact, that in Little Britain township the first land within Lancaster county limits was surveyed and granted under legal and governmental regulations. This tract was known in the original grant as "Milcom Island," and it was surveyed by John Wilmer in 1704, who, apparently, was of the section of Philadelphia, though it is conceded that this land was not occupied by an actual residential settler until 1715, thus antedating in the grant by six years the early settlement of the Mennonites, and being followed by actual warrants and settlement, but four years after that Mennonite settlement Milcom Island consisted of a tract of 1,000 acres, surveyed perfectly rectangular in form, exactly twice as long as it was wide, and extending the long way north and south. As nearly as it can be located to-day, it included that section lying southwest of Little Britain postoffice, also known as Elim, and extending down to and beyond Kirk's Mills and Wrightsdale village, and within the boundaries, among others, farms of Lewis J. Kirk and Dr. James A. Peoples, both of whom are direct descendants of the very earliest settlers of this section; also the farms now owned by Dr. Ed. Wright, Howard Coates, James Paxson, the William King farm and the Brabsons and the Susan Griffith farm, who likewise were among the earliest in that section. John Wilmer transferred the warrant to Randal Janney a few years after obtaining it, and he, in turn, transferred it to John Budd and Sarah Morrey. In 1714 Budd and Morrey exchanged it for two warrants for 500 acres each near Philadelphia county, and it was surrendered to the proprietaries. Immediately thereafter, or on November 5, 1714, the northern half of this tract was granted by warrant to Alexander Ross, who afterward sold it to John Jamison, June 5, 1725, and the Joseph Jamison farm is now a portion of the original tract, so far as we have been able to discover. The exact time at which buildings were erected and permanent settlement made does not appear, but the indications point to the fact that it must have been very soon after the date of Ross' warrant thereto in 1714. The southern half was not settled until some twenty years thereafter, when patents were granted for it to Elisha Gatchell and Henry Reynolds. Each was of equal portion. This lower half runs down into the hills of Octoraro, and is much rougher and less easy of cultivation than the more northerly portions, which may account for the delay in its settlement. Before 1742 most of the surrounding land was located, and in the name of persons whose family name is still extant in that section, being such well-known names as William Gibson, David McComb, Benjamin Delworth, Janet Jamison. Among the other earlier settlers, whose descendants are there to-day, are: William King, William N. Griffith, Sarah Phillips and Rachel J. Pickering, Samuel Carter and Seth Kinsey.

This section of our county is of great natural fertility, especially the valleys, with the large, magnificent streams of water running through them, while yielding to-day fertile pasture land and fine crops of wheat, corn and oats, hay and potatoes, that at that day were clad in immense forests of oak, chestnut and hickory; and no doubt the valleys of the Octoraro, the Conowingos and the smaller streams, Peters' Creek and their hundreds of tributaries, made this a great natural hunting ground of the Indians of that day. These same natural attractions soon became known to the very early Quaker settlement, which is now south of the Mason and Dixon line, though when settled was believed to be within the boundaries of Pennsylvania, and part of the lands granted to Penn by his sovereign. That section covered and included the villages and surrounding country, the Brick Meeting-house, Rising Sun and Colora, known by the general name of the Nottinghams.

As is well known, they were settled before the dawning of the eighteenth century, and, if I recall rightly, the two hundredth anniversary of the Nottingham settlement was held some fifteen years ago. The Nottingham settlement was composed almost exclusively of Friends, or commonly called "Quakers," and was very extensive and apparently prosperous, not only as a farming community, but in their religious organizations, and a number of "Meetings" were established prior to 1700. Very early in the eighteenth century, or about 1715, or thereafter, this Quaker population was attracted to the northwestward across the Octoraro waters, by the fertility and natural resources of that land, attested by the evidence of the giant oaks, hickories, chestnut, poplars and sycamores, which only attain their greatest growth in the most fertile land. When this evidence was contrasted by the early Nottingham settlers with the scrubby growths of oak, pine and cedars that clad too many of the hills of their chosen sections, the Nottinghams, they began to move into it in increasing numbers, many of them stopping in the sections now in the limits of Little Britain, but more of them going further over into the fertile, smoother land of the Conowingo Valley, included in the present boundaries of Fulton township. Among the first to take up and patent lands in Fulton township was Emanuel Grubb, who, on December 10, 1713, or but three years after the Mennonite settlement, patented 100 acres of land, immediately adding 200 to it and soon thereafter 200 more. This section was granted by warranty, under the name of "Three Partners," and now includes those fine farm lands of Annie Wood, Cyrus Herr and brother, Levi Kirk and others, and includes the village of Pleasant Grove and vicinity. Soon following Grubb came William Teague, who, on June 6, 1715, secured a warrant for a tract known as "Teague's Endeavor," and one year thereafter another tract called "Teague's Forest." These tracts are now or lately were in possession of James Maxwell's descendants, the Davis Brown tract, the Jerry B. Haines tract, owned by Eugene M. Haines to-day. We find that on August 24, 1726, an extensive tract, containing some 600 acres, was patented to Thomas Johnson. This tract seems to have covered and included the land extending up and around Peach Bottom, including the famous slate quarries of that section, later owned by Jeremiah B. Brown, a very prominent man in his day, and James A. Caldwell and the Sanders McSparran farm, also the large farm, known as 'Timothy Haines', now owned by Dr. A. H. Stubbs.

Another influx of settlers shortly followed, confining themselves more directly to the more heavily timbered land of the Conowingo Valley. Among the first of these was James King, whose descendants are many in that section, and the extensive family of Browns, who took up 600 or 700 acres in and about that section, extending from Wakefield, or Penn Hill, across to Fulton House, and as far south as Texas. These tracts were patented, one of them by James King, called the Cave Lands, on both sides of the Conowingo Creek, which at that time was spelled "Canarawango," which is an Indian word, and is interpreted to mean "canoe won't go." The first portion of this tract stayed in the King name for many years, and included the Bradley's Mill farm, the Annie Yocum farm, now owned by the Bradleys, and the Montillon Brown farm, now owned by D. F. Magee, on which farm is still standing the permanent homestead of brick, slate-covered, built after the log-cabin days, and still is bearing its date of 1760. North of that, further up the Conowingo, lands were patented by the Caldwells, the Ewings, the Stubbs, the Porters and the Bradleys. Very early in its history, the family of Browns, usually designated as the "Nottingham" Browns, came into this section. Though I have not discovered that they were the original patentees of any of our earliest grants, but Jeremiah B. Brown patented an extensive tract, 600 acres, apparently covering and including the section now known as the Day Wood farm, the Annie Wood farm at Goshen village, the Levi and Slater Brown section and probably some portions of the adjoining farms. He took his patent under the name of "Goshen." As we know, according to Biblical history, this was the "land flowing with milk and honey."

Whatever may have been its claim to that title in its earliest days, no one can now go into that section, and, from its gently rolling hilltops, near the residence of Neal Hambleton, look over these broad fields of grain and meadows, dotted with hundreds of lowing kine, that literally furnish the milk to the creameries at Fulton House, Goshen, West Brook and Bradleys, and fail to feel that this section is most appropriately named.

Last summer the writer, on the afternoon of a most beautiful day, attending a social gathering on that old historic meeting-house, at Penn Hill, which lies just a little westward up out of this valley, sitting in the center of the meeting house, looked out of the open door to the east. Within the focus of his view, from the center of the meeting house, confined by the jambs of the door, opening to the east, a magnificent horoscope was given, including the center of Goshen; and a fairer, more fertilly-productive stretch of hillside, meadow land and gently-receding fields of grain and grass has seldom come within my view at one glance.

The Browns, who have descended from the original Jeremiah B., and, we think, his brothers, included in their stock, in those early days, members of the Legislature, a Judge of our Courts, and later that masterful mechanic and engineer, William Brown, engineer-in-chief of the Pennsylvania Railroad, and likewise the present representative in the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania from this county, J. Hay Brown, formerly of the Bar of Lancaster county.

Still further northward and eastward up the Conowingo and towards the Britain township line of to-day, in 1743 a tract was located by William Montgomery, and remained in the Montgomery family for 100 years, and his descendants still remain thereabouts. This covers the land now owned by Jason Walton, Lindley Patterson, Wm. Black and Robert Black, and westward of that the same year, 1742, William Fulton took up 393 acres, lying along the Conowingo Creek, which were surveyed to one James Gillespie, which tract was increased by three other pieces, making it a tract of nearly 600 acres. This seems to have covered what is now known as the Frank C. Pyle mill, the Smedley property, John Landis Herr's property and probably the Dr. Gryder property, now Shoemaker's. The present Pyle's mill was early erected on this property, and is the third, and is among the oldest mills in the southern end of the county.

In this connection it may be mentioned that the building of mills quickly followed the clearing and farming of the land, as they were a necessary part of the industries, which were required in the lives of the early settlers. As stated above, the Pyle mill was among the early ones, but what was known as Woods' mills, close to the present Goshen store, probably antedated it by a few years; and at or about the same period, a mile or so lower down the stream, the Bradley mill, owned by Frank Bradley, the son of Amos K. Bradley, was built on a tract which was patented under date of February 25, 1743, and the Annie Woods mill, southeast of Pleasant Grove, was erected at a very early date.

But the very first mill of all built was in that section in 1733, and was known as King's mill, and located partly on land now owned by D. F. Magee and partly owned by Augustus Heeps, and stood close to the bridge called the "twin bridges," spanning the Conowingo between these two farms. Only the old marks of the foundation walls and race are now visible, all vestige of the mill having disappeared years ago.

Returning again to the east side of this section, we find among the very earliest patents preceding the Mennonite settlement by three years was a warrant dated June 10, 1707, to Edward Pleadwell, for 700 acres of land. It was in the extreme southern edge of Little Britain township, and included what is now famous as Woods' chrome banks, lying on both sides of the Octoraro creek, in a bend of the creek, below Lea's bridge. Whether there was any actual settlement of this land at or about that time it is hard to determine; but that the value of the land was known and recognized and first, we may say, discovered by the early settlers of the Nottingham Quaker section, is very apparent. In this section, centrally located, on the 10th of January, 1792, was established the meeting-house and burial-ground known as "Eastland," the founders and first trustees of which were Henry Reynolds, Reuben Reynolds, James Harlan, Henry Reynolds, Jr., and Abner Brown, and six acres and thirty-five perches of land were set aside for the purposes of the meeting-house. The meeting, though not large, is still maintained. The meeting-house at Penn Hill was founded many years prior to this, however, and was first conducted as a branch of the Nottingham monthly meeting. On the 14th of June, 1749, it was erected into a separate meeting, at least the proceedings looking to that end were instituted at that time, and John Smith, Joshua Johnson, Joshua Pusey, Thos. Carleton, Robert Lewis and James Robinson met at James King's residence, and finally, on May 11, 1752, reported in favor of building a meeting-house, and on March 17, 1758, a conveyance for the land from Michael King was made to Samuel Boyd, Joshua Brown, Isaac Williams and Vincent King as trustees, and a house was erected. It is located on the summit of the ridge between Conowingo and Puddle-Duck creeks. There is a thriving congregation belonging to this meeting to this day including many of the most prominent families of that section. Their forefathers for several generations back sleep in the adjacent cemetery, and to read the names on the lowly tombstones, dating back 150 to 160 years, is an epitome of the biographical history of that section.

Farther eastward and northward in Little Britain township, and overlapping into Coleraine and into the Drumores, we find to-day the descendants of the Scotch-Irish race, whose ancestors settled through that section at a later day, but who played no less important part in the history of the Lower End, from that period at which they came. We find among them the names of Fulton, Ramseys, Whiteside, General Steele, Hayes, Patterson, McCaullagh, Linton, Clendennin, Fergusons, McConnell and many others that were of the fighting Irish blood and in strong contrast to the peaceful Quaker. Each played a useful and necessary part in the up-building of this section, but the names of the latter only become prominent when war overtook our country and their services were needed as soldiers and commanders and the story of the Revolution and their story is one, and it will be another one for me to relate. which I hope to do at no distant day.

JOHN C. LEWIS.

Before the reading of the above paper, Mr. Magee stated that he had drawn much of his information and data for the same from the notes and writings of one John C. Lewis, Esq., a noted Justice of the Peace and surveyor of the Southern End, with whom he was well acquainted, and, incidentally, gave a short and interesting talk on the man, somewhat as follows:

John C. Lewis, Esq., was for many years a noted character in the Lower End, and his peculiar talents, acquirements and eccentricities made him a noted figure in that section for many years. He came into the neighborhood in the early fifties, and began teaching school when he was a young man, and his early life before that time was a mystery. After his death it developed that he came from Montgomery county and his friends came on to claim a small estate which he left. He taught school for a number of years in Britain, Fulton and Drumore townships.

He was an omnivorous reader, and, being possessed of a remarkable memory, his fund of knowledge on all subjects was very extended, and only his peculiarities and eccentricities in his methods and habits of life kept him from attaining the distinction to which he would otherwise have become entitled. He was a good school teacher as long as he followed it, but in later life he devoted all of his time that he cared to devote to labor to land surveying and conveyancing, and to the duties of his office as Justice of the Peace, which he held for many succeeding terms in East Drumore township.

His active life there extended from about 1850 to 1892, when he died, though the last few years of it, through illness, he was not able to do much surveying. During this long period he had surveyed the greater number of the farms in the Southern End, some of them several times, and his wonderful memory, it is said, served him so well that he could walk into a thicket of underbrush and leaves and, after looking around a while, would say, "that corner ought to be about here," and, thrusting down his Jacob's staff, would hit the stone fairly. He was very fond of history, and as he had, in searching titles, traced to their first source, the titles of nearly all farms of that section, his fund of information on this line was wonderful, and always accurate and complete.

He was for some years County Surveyor, and took great interest in this work, and other surveyors soon found he was their master when it came to establishing correctly, disputed lines.

His great fault was his utter disregard for the conventionalities of dress or cleanliness. Dressed at his best he looked like a tramp, only perhaps a little bit dirtier and more completely unkempt and shabby. There are many stories told of him in this regard. Most of them, however, will hardly bear retelling here, but among them is the following, which shows at a glance the character of the man. I should state that he always used the very best of language, absolutely correct in grammar, diction and spelling, and wrote a very fine hand, as all of his work amply attests.

The story is that at one time when he was County Surveyor he had occasion to meet several high officials of the Pennsylvania Railroad to locate a certain line. The officials came on the ground and waited some time for the County Surveyor, thinking he had not come. Seeing an old man sitting by the roadside a little distance away, they went to him to ask if he had seen the Surveyor. They found him sitting on a stone, dressed mainly in an old blue army overcoat, a dirty shirt rolled back at the collar showing a brawny, hairy chest, pants with but few buttons and not enough patches to cover his nakedness, a pair of old plough shoes were on his feet, minus strings, and no stockings, and all crowned by a hat in which his thick shock of grizzly hair formed the roof; he sat contentedly munching his lunch, consisting of five cents' worth of crackers and cheese from the neighboring store. In answer to their inquiries for the missing Surveyor he arose, and, with a perfect Chesterfieldian bow and military salute, he said: "No doubt I am the gentleman whom you seek. I am at your service when you are ready."

He lived and held his office in a little eight by ten shop about a mile below the Unicorn. This office was stacked on all sides with many old deeds, title briefs and notes of survey innumerable, but so utterly careless and dilatory did he become in his older days, that the rain and the weather came through and destroyed the most of them, and at his death but little remained except those for which he had actual use.

He had been a soldier in the war and drew a pension, but seldom spoke of his services, but talked rather the gospel of peace and good will as the philosophy of his life.

Minutes of the May Meeting

Lancaster, Pa., May 2, 1913.

The regular monthly meeting of the Lancaster County Historical Society was held this evening in the society's room. President Steinman was in the chair, while Miss Martha B. Clark filled the duties of secretary.

The librarian, Miss Bausman, presented the following report:

Rathfon; Map of the United States and Territories showing the possessions and aggressions of the slave power, from Prof. C. N. Heller; picture of a Conestoga wagon and pamphlet entitled, "Ninety Links in the Chain of Years," from Walter C. H. Harbaugh; report of State Librarian of Pennsylvania for 1911, from F. R. Diffenderffer.

A vote of thanks was extended the several donors.

Charles Ezra Bowman was elected to membership, and the names of the following were proposed: Charles G. Baker, Esq., and Henry C. Carpenter.

The subject of having the society's various papers copyrighted was taken up, and after being discussed, Mr. D. F. Magee introduced the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the president, through the secretary, shall, when any papers of the society are published in other magazines, call the attention of the publishers to the fact that due credit should be given this society."

President Steinman named the following as the committee to plan for the celebration of the society to be held in the fall: W. U. Hensel, Judge Charles I. Landis and F. R. Diffenderffer. The general theme of the celebration will be "Lancaster County in the War for the Union."

Two papers were read, D. F. Magee, Esq., having as his subject, "Early Settlement and History of Little Britain Township, Including Fulton Township." The author prefaced his paper with a brief reference to John C. Lewis, a resident of the lower end, who was a school teacher, noted scrivener and a man of great knowledge.

H. Frank Eshleman, Esq., had as his subject, "Early Local Historical Items," culled from the American Weekly Mercury, the earliest newspaper in Pennsylvania.

After a discussion of the papers the society adjourned.

Thaddeus Stevens and the Southern States

Thaddeus Stevens was very bitter in his political enmity to the Southern States. He resented the influence in both the Houses of Congress of the members from that section, which usually returned, by re-election, most of its able men, therefore giving it preponderance of influence owing to the ability and experience of its representatives who were trained in politics. For this reason, at the close of the Civil War, he was opposed to the trial of Jefferson Davis and others for treason, as it was only the individual and not a State who could commit the crime; therefore, if the individual was convicted there would be nothing to prevent the other voters of a State from electing representatives to Congress, especially if the North held that the Southern States would not secede from the Union. This stand would make his ground tenable, that the United States recognized the belligerency of the South during the war, and, therefore, the Confederate States become conquered territory and would not be entitled to Congressional representation. His idea was to wipe out State lines and organize the territories of Lincoln, Grant, Sherman, Sheridan and other territories to be named after Union officers and govern them the same as the other territorial governments in the United States.

This view of Stevens doubtless, to a great extent, influenced his course in the case of Senator C. C. Clay, Jr., of Alabama, at the close of the war.

Clement Claiborne Clay, Jr., 1819-

1882, was United States Senator from Alabama, from 1853 to 1861, and after the breaking out of the Civil War he was a member of the Confederate Senate and was sent to Canada, in 1864, on a secret mission, with a view to arousing in the public mind there a sympathy for the Southern cause that would assist in inducing a suspension of hostilities. He was a son of C. C. Clay, Sr., who had also represented Alabama in the United States and was at one time Governor of that State.

Richard Jacobs Haldeman, 1831-1885, whose letters to Mrs. Clay follow, was a son of Jacob Miller Haldeman 1781-1856. The latter was born in Lancaster county, and removed to Harrisburg in 1830. He married, in 1810, Elizabeth E. Jacobs, 1789-1844, daughter of Samils Jacobs, of Spring Grove, Lancaster county. His son, Rochard, married Margaret, a daughter of the late Senator Simon Cameron. Richard was a full cousin to the late Professor S. S. Haldeman, of Chickies. He graduated at Yale in 1851, and also at Heidelberg and Berlin Universities. He was an attache to the American Legation to France, during President Pierce's administration, and a member of the U. S. House of Representatives from the 19th district (Cumberland, Adams and York counties) during the 41st and 42d Congress. For several years he was the editor of the Harrisburg Patriot and Union and founder of the Harrisburg Daily Patriot. Mr. Haldeman was a friend of C. C. Clay, Jr., in the ante bellum days.

After the assassination of President Lincoln, the charge was made that Clay was a party to the plot, and that the conspiracy was formed while he was in Canada. President Johnson issued a proclamation offering a reward for the capture of Davis and Clay, the amount of the reward for the latter being $25,000, although at the time it was frequently incorrectly given as $100,000.

When Clay learned of Lincoln's assassination, he exclaimed, "God help us! If that be true, it is the worst blow that has been struck at the South," and on hearing of the reward for his capture, instead of attempting to escape, as he was advised to do by many friends, he said to his wife, "As I am conscious of my innocence, my judgment is that I should at once surrender to the nearest Federal authorities," and sent the following telegram:

"Bt. Major General Wilson, United States Army:

"Seeing the proclamation of the President of the United States, I go to-day, with the Honourable P. Phillips, to deliver myself to your custody.

"C. C. CLAY, JR."

Clay started at once for Macon, Ga., where he surrendered to General Wilson, in May, 1865, from where he was removed to Fort Monroe with Jefferson Davis, who had been captured.

It seems that the first intention was to try Clay as a party to the plot to assassinate Lincoln and, when this was abandoned, then to try him for treason. Mrs. Clay at once started her indefatigable efforts in her husband's behalf and interested many prominent men of the North, among them Charles O'Connor, the great New York lawyer; T. W. Pierce, of Boston; Robert J. Walker, Benjamin Wood, editor and proprietor of the New York Daily News; Horace Greeley, Judge Jeremiah Black, of York, and Richard J. Haldeman, of Harrisburg.

The first we hear of Mr. Stevens' interest in the matter is the following letter to Mrs. Clay from Mr. Haldeman:

"Mrs. C. C. Clay:

"My Dear Madam: Your exceedingly affecting letter did not reach me until long after it was written..... So soon as it was practicable, I visited Honorable Thaddeus Stevens at his home in Lancaster city. I selected Mr. Stevens more particularly on account of his independence of character, his courage, and his disposition, intellectual and official leadership in the lower House of Congress, and in his party. It is not necessary for me to tell you, Madam, that, knowing your husband, I never had a suspicion of his complicity in the assassination of Mr. Lincoln, but you will be gratified to learn that Mr. Stevens scorned the idea of either his guilt or that of any prominent sojourners in Canada.

"Mr. Stevens holds, that as the belligerent character of the Southern States was recognized by the United States, neither Mr. Davis nor Mr. Clay can be tried for treason..... That, if tried, Mr. Clay should be tried in Alabama. You will perceive, then, my dear Madam, that connected with the proposed trial of your husband, there are profound questions of statesmanship and party. On this account, Mr. Stevens would not like to have his name prematurely mentioned. He is using his great political influence in the direction indicated, and it is, of course, much greater when he is not known as the counsel of Mr. Clay..... I promised to see Mr. Stevens so soon as the form and place of trial are announced..... Mr. Stevens will be a tower of strength, and command attention and respect from President, Secretary and Congress.

"Hoping, Madam, when I address you again, it will be under happier auspices, I am

"R. J. Haldeman."

"Several years later Mr. Stevens reiterated these statements to one of the editors of the New York Tribune, who again quoted Mr. Stevens' remarks in an able editorial."

Judge Joseph Holt, of Kentucky, who was at the time Judge Advocate General of the Army and Judge Advocate of the Military Commission which tried those accused of the plot to assassinate Lincoln, seems to have had a personal animosity against Clay. Holt had been a member of President Buchanan's Cabinet as Postmaster General and Secretary of War, and also, at that time, a strong personal friend of Clay's. The latter claimed that Holt's animosity to him and Davis was owing to the fact that on the breaking out of the Civil War Holt had espoused the cause of the South and they had knowledge of this. One of Clay's friends said that Holt was "a man who had forsaken his own section for gain." Secretary Stanton supported Holt in his persecution of Clay.

Mrs. Clay interested General Grant in her husband's case, who wrote President Johnson, on November 26, 1865:

".....I now respectfully recommend the release of Mr. C. C. Clay. The manner of Mr. Clay's surrender, I think, is full guarantee that if released on parole, to appear when called for, either for trial or otherwise, that he will be forthcoming."

The continued incarceration of Clay without trial began to raise criticism in the North. Mrs. Clay writes: "Early in the month of February two important letters reached me through Mr. R. J. Haldeman. They were addressed to the President, and bore the signature of Thaddeus Stevens and Robert J. Walker, respectively. Since my letter addressed to him in May, 1865, Mr. Haldeman's efforts had been unremitting in my husband's behalf with those whose recommendations were likely to have most weight with the President and his advisors. He now wrote me as follows:

"Mrs. C. C. Clay, Jr.

"My Dear Madam: I enclose you a very handsome letter from the Honourable R. J. Walker to the President. I also sent you the letter of Mr. Stevens, which has become of some importance in view of Mr. Stevens' recent utterances. Mr. Walker considers it of the highest importance, and wonders how I obtained it.

"After seeing you, I called on Mr. Stevens in reference to the proposed visit (to you), but found him brooding over the violent speech which he has since made. I did not, therefore, deem it prudent to insist upon the performance of his promise and am confirmed in my judgment by events.

"During the day I heard something which convinced me the President would not then act. This I could not bring myself to tell you, and therefore obeyed a hasty summons to New York by an unceremonious departure from Washington. As the future unfolds, I hope to be again at Washington and at the propitious moment. I hope you will keep up your good spirits, for, upon the faith of a somewhat phlegmatic and never over-sanguine Dutchman, I think the period of Mr. Clay's release approaches rapidly.....Mr. Walker, however, desires me to say to you that 'as we must all go to Clay at last, why not go at once?' I think this pointed witticism would bear repetition to the President.

"I am, very respectfully, Madam,

"Yours,

"R. J. HALDEMAN."

"February 3, 1866."

Senator Henry Wilson, of Massachusetts, then took up the question of Mr. Clay's release and wrote the President the following letter. Mr. Johnson at the time made the remark, it is claimed, that Mr. Wilson would not commit himself to writing as "He fears the Radical press too much":

"His Excellency, the President of the United States.

"Sir: Mrs. Clay, the wife of Clement C. Clay, is now in the city, and has requested me to obtain permission for her husband to go to his home on parole. His father is said to be at the point of death, his mother recently deceased, and, if there be no objections or reasons unknown to me why the request of Mrs. Clay should be denied, I have no hesitation in recommending its favorable consideration, if only from motives of humanity, as I have no doubt Mr. Clay will be forthcoming when his presence is again required by the Government.

"I have the honor to be,

"Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

"H. WILSON."

Although many Confederates, who had held prominent official positions, had been released, among them Vice President Stephens, Secretary of the Navy Mallory and Admiral Semms, owing to the continued bitter opposition of Secretary Stanton and Judge Holt, the release of Mr. Clay was not effected until some six weeks after Mr. Wilson had written the President, when the following order was issued:

"War Department,

"Ordered:

"That Clement C. Clay, Jr., is hereby released from confinement and permitted to return and remain in the State of Alabama, and to visit such other places in the United States as his personal business may render absolutely necessary, upon the following conditions, viz.: That he take the oath of allegiance to the United States, and give his parole of honour to conduct himself as a loyal citizen of the same, and to report himself in person at any time and place to answer any charges that may hereafter be preferred against him by the United States.

"By order of the President,

"E. D. TOWNSEND, .

"Ass't Adj't General."

It is stated that this order was originally prepared for the signature of Secretary Stanton, but the words "Secretary of War" had been crossed out. The form of an adjutant general signing by order of the President instead of the secretary of war was unusual to say the least.

Mr. Clay's release at this time was no doubt owing to sacrifice and untiring energy of his wife, to whom Judge Black wrote: "Tell your great and good husband I could do nothing for him, because his magnificent wife left nobody else a chance to serve him."

Mrs. Clay was the daughter of the Rev. Payton Randolph Tunstall. Her mother's father was General William Arrington, of North Carolina, who won his title in the Revolutionary War.

Much of the information in this paper was secured from the Memoirs of Mrs. Clay, entitled "A Belle of the Fifties," published in 1905, by Doubleday, Page & Co., New York.

Society's Annual Outing

More than a hundred members and guests of the Lancaster County Historical Society attended its annual summer outing Friday, July 11, at Elizabeth Farms and Furnace, just north of Brickerville, Lancaster county. It was entirely informal and in picnic style. The visitors all arrived in automobiles, and the spectacle presented of thirty or more cars gliding over fine roads that lead to the place and through the woods and meadows was a very brilliant one. The company assembled in the grove northwest of the mansion house, where a basket luncheon was partaken of until about 1:30. Among the numerous guests was Miss Blanche Nevin, of Windsor Forges, who brought with her a new song, composed and set to music by herself, sounding a welcome of President Wilson's daughter to the Nevin family—the engagement of her nephew, Frank B. Sayre, having recently been announced. Miss Katharine R. Looze, of Reading, who has taken high rank as a novelist by her stories of Pennsylvania-German life and character, under the writing name of "Georg Shock" accompanied Mrs. Heber Smith, daughter of Hon. George F. Baer, to the occasion. Mr. B. Dawson Coleman, of Lebanon, owner of the old mansion, the site of the furnace and the surrounding grounds, and his sister, Miss Fanny Coleman, who is the owner and proprietor of the Elizabeth Farms, consisting of about a thousand acres, motored down from Lebanon and received the guests.

At 1:30 p. m. the entire party was welcomed to the grounds of the mansion house, and found chairs, benches and comfortable seats on the west side of the mansion, and in the shade of the great sycamore trees that adorn the lawn. The company joined in singing "America," and, after that, W. U. Hensel delivered an address on the historic associations of Elizabeth. This was followed by the singing, in chorus, of Julia Ward Howe's "Battle Hymn of the Republic."

After this the visitors were entertained by Mr. and Miss Coleman by being admitted to the many interesting rooms of the old mansion, both the original part built by Stiegel and the part annexed by Robert Coleman when he acquired the property about one hundred and twenty years ago. The place is filled with antique furniture, splendid specimens of Stiegel's ornamental iron works, and other objects of great interest and value.

A Visit to Brickerville.

During the day most of the participants made a visit to the old Lutheran Church at Brickerville, examining its antique and interesting interior, where an old wineglass pulpit and sounding board remain, probably the only devices of the kind now in our county. The interesting old stairways leading to the balconies, the very long stove-pipes which run from cannon stoves to the roof—the edifice being without chimneys—the straight-backed and very uncomfortable pews, and many other antique features, engaged the attention of the visitors. They also wandered through the old churchyard and viewed with special interest the grave of Stiegel's first wife and the German inscription thereon, which are referred to in Mr. Hensel's address.

The visit of one group was made particularly impressive by its members singing in chorus and with fervor Newman's "Lead Kindly Light," and Luther's memorable "Ein feste burg ist unser Gott."

Altogether the day was most charming to all who participated in the occasion. The weather was perfect; and hereafter when any one wants to make fit answer to the poet Lowell's inquiry, "What is so rare as a day in June?" the ready answer will be: "Friday, July 11, 1913."

MR. HENSEL'S ADDRESS.

Mr. Hensel's address was as follows:

The geography of Lancaster county is unique and shapely. It has none of the formal rectangularity which makes the streets of a modern city or the boundaries of a political division in a prairie State so geometrically monotonous. Set in below a sort of roof-like range of hills, and packed between the Octoraro and Susquehanna, as now bounded and constituted, it is a most homogeneous bit of earth. The late Simon P. Eby described it as "kite shaped," and pointed out how the high wall north of us and many lower ridges which traverse it and cradle the intervening rolling lands act as wind breaks to shield its fertile fields from storm violence. Oddly enough, while its ranges of hills, in the main, run east and west, its waters, for the most part, flow from the north to the south, as they all meet tide in the Chesapeake—except a few Welsh Mountain springs which give some flavor to the otherwise tasteless Brandywine. Four-fifths of its land is under the plow. It still retains its primacy in agriculture. The remaining bits of forest and the lush meadows are kept for "beauty made the bride of use." No run-down farms offend the eye of the capitalist; no shabby surroundings shock the artistic sense; every prospect pleases—not even "man is vile."

Although this venerable bailiwick suffered partition when York was cut off from it, and again when Dauphin and Lebanon were created, it remained a compact and almost complete epitome of a great Commonwealth—and propositions to further dismember it have never received substantial encouragement nor even patient consideration. The ambition of Columbia to be a county seat for the valley of the Codorus; Middletown, the region of the Conewago and the Donegals and Hempfields; the aspirations of Cambridge to annex Churchtown of Lancaster, Morgantown of Berks, and Honeybrook of Chester; the longing of Oxford to unite the southwest corner of Chester and the Scotch-Irish and Quaker lower end of Lancaster into a new county—all passed, like the thistledown, "noiseless out of sight."

The nomenclature of the county is likewise significant of the racial and religious diversity of its population, fused into a composite citizenship—soft and musical Indian like Cocalico, Conestoga and Pequea, Conowingo, Octoraro and Chiquesalunga; stately English, like Salisbury and Warwick, Manor, Penn, Little Britain and the Hempfields; belligerent Irish and stormy Scotch-Irish like Drumore and Coleraine, Donegal and Kilbagan; the strain of Wales in Caernarvon and Brecknock townships; patient German, such as Strasburg, Mannheim and New Holland; Sonneberg, Hasseberg and Bergstrass; plous and Scriptural; like Ephrata, Providence and Paradise; and patriotic American such as Columbia, Washington and Clay—being fastened upon its townships, towns, hills and waters. Its resources are as varied as its strains of blood and race. They exhibit not only a pre-eminence in the yield of the farm, but a profuse product of mill and factory, and even a variety of minerals that would astonish the inquirer who has not delved into this phase of our manifold and marvellous wealth.

Geographically the characteristic Lancaster county—the seat of Pennsylvania-German thrift—is underlaid with limestone; in its lower end, where the lighter timber attracted the more vivacious, but less plodding, Scotch-Irish, the soil is shale and slaty, while here along the south side of the Furnace Hills, the formation is Mesozoic sandstone and shale. This distinguishes every border township on the northern line, from West Donegal to Caernarvon, though a thin trail of trap rock boulders leads from the Susquehanna, below Bainbridge, by Elizabethtown, Old Line, White Oak and Mount Airy, to this locality.

Elizabeth's Varied Associations.

These physical and historic features of Lancaster county forcefully suggest themselves at this time, and especially on this spot, where the environing landscape is adorned on the one side by a Presbyterian church and on the other by a landmark of Lutheranism; amid these ancient and handsome edifices of native red sandstone; in the shadow of the great hills, which, until the uncovering of the Lake Superior iron ore region, held the most productive group of mines in this country, and have already yielded nearly thirty millions of tons; between streams whose names, such as Hammer creek and Furnace run, recall days long past when their water powers were harnessed to active industries, whose wheels are broken and the fires gone out; and where the historic families of Huber, Stiegel, Grubb and Coleman, recall the lordly ironmasters who flourished as leaders in social and business life.

I can add nothing to the oft-told story of their rise and reign; but it may have a passing interest to you to be reminded that here blazed and burned for over a hundred years the famous Elizabeth furnace, so named for Stiegel's wife and Huber's daughter. Though these fires have been banked for more than fifty years, though the sod has creased out the rugged piles of slag and the wild flowers have wreathed the crumbled walls with festoons of fragrant beauty, the township in which we meet, when carved out of the earlier Warwick, took the name it bears from this fair daughter of its soil. It was not, as some historians have inaccurately recorded, bestowed upon the new district in honor of England's virgin queen. The fashion of naming the old furnaces for the wives, daughters or sweethearts of their owners was familiar, as exemplified by the Sarah, Lucy, Margaretta, Henrietta, Joanna and many others—just as the old Boston and Virginia skippers called their craft Sally Ann, Barbara, Mary and Susan. Even the old cargoes of rich and ripe Madeira were cellared under the name of the schooner that carried them safely over. In our county I recall two young women—old now only in years—who gave the names "Alice" and "Mazie" to the canal boats of their father, gallant soldier of two wars, whose last trip on the inland waterways antedated Gettysburg.

Stiegel and His Fortune.

The earliest associations of Elizabeth, of course, cluster around the career and character of that brilliant adventurer from Baden, who brought from his native Mannheim to the town he founded and named, youth, fortune and learning. It is by no means certain Heinrich Wilhelm Stiegel had the rank of "baron" by any grant except the patent of American fame and favor. But it is unquestionable that he came here at the age of early manhood with what was a very considerable amount of money for investment and speculation. If it was as much as 40,000 pounds it was enormous for that day. He was only twenty when he sailed from Cowes in the brig "Nancy," and landed at Philadelphia, August 31, 1750. Nearly ten years earlier the possibilities of iron-making in this region had been exploited. The Grubbs, as we shall later tell, years before Stiegel landed on American shores, had been operating a furnace at Cornwall; the keen sense of that famous family's progenitor had led to his acquisition of large tracts of mineral and timber lands, as early as 1737, which were destined to supply great furnaces for hundreds of years, and even to entail fortune on generations now unborn. Insignificant as was a plant that turned out about a ton of pig iron a day, in that early enterprise was the potentiality of vast industries that have fed and fostered many thousands of families and brought their owners and operators countless millions. Before the Grubbs, in 1762, acquired Hopewell Forge, on Hammer Creek, it was owned by Jacob Giles, a Baltimore merchant. With that perspicacity characteristic of the Philadelphian's commercial sense—which later led some of its foremost citizens to make profitable venture in the lumber, coal and oil districts of Northwestern Pennsylvania, still later on the shores of the Great Lakes, and again on the Pacific—Thomas Willing had taken up lands in Cocalico, and John Wister had holdings in Warwick. The Stedmans, Charles and Alexander were pioneers of land and industrial enterprises hereabouts, and their purchase of 729 acres was from Isaac Norris, son-in-law of James Logan, to whom it was originally patented. Robert Coleman, Irish immigrant, born in 1748 at Castle Fin—which name later attached to a furnace in York county—found employment with Peter Grubb, at Hopewell Forge, on Hammer Creek, above Speedwell, and a few miles northwest of us. He had worked for the Olds at Quitapahilla, which is now Lebanon county; and before that he had tarried briefly at some of the Chester county furnaces, for over there they were making iron as early as 1710; and of such excellence that the English sought to extinguish American competition first by taxation, and then by prohibition.

Marries Huber's Daughter.

For two years after his arrival Stiegel arrived and prospected through the Colonies. He finally located in Philadelphia, where Jacob Huber, builder and founder of Elizabeth, doubtless had a town house. Just how and where Stiegel met and wooed and won Elizabeth I shall not tell you—for there are some things a man can keep secret for a century and a half; and, though he bought the Elizabeth furnace property from his father-in-law, as early as 1757, he kept a home in the Philadelphia house he had built until 1765.

That Huber was not of the thrifty and cautious Quaker tribe, lawyers and land agents, merchants and mariners, who sent Penn to Holland to import the German Quakers, called Mennonites, to fell the forests and to wear the farmer's yoke of patient toil; nor was he of the aggressive Scotch-Irish who braved torch and tomahawk and stood along the firing line that stretched from Donegal to Paxtang, to Derry and Tulpehocken. He proudly boasted not only his lineage, but his own pre-eminence, when he cut deep into the date plate of his furnace stack, reared on these grounds:

"Johann Huber, der erster Deutsche Mann
Der das eisen werk vollfuren Kann"

His furnace was no doubt a small affair. Sons-in-law generally make a venturesome advance on their wife's parents—sometimes for better; oft-times for worse. So we find Stiegel tearing down the old furnace and building a new one, as soon as he got title. On its walls, reared in 1757—and operated for just one hundred years—he promptly emblazoned a new legend.

He conquered new worlds, too, adding Charming Forge to his possessions and set out on that career of artistic stove-plate making, which supplies a new theme to the modern collector and historian.

Although he subsequently lived in Philadelphia part of the year, he and his family were domiciled at Elizabeth, as their membership in the Lutheran Church at Brickerville attests; and the burial in the graveyard there of his child Elizabeth, who died in infancy, and of his wife, who died February 3, 1758, leaving to survive her a daughter, Barbara. The inscription of his wife's gravestone runs thus:

"Here rests Elizabeth, whose lifeless body is committed to the earth until Jehova calls her to another life. God has already freed the soul in the love and wounds of Jesus, from the fetters and thralldom of sin. This is the tribute which posterity pays her memory:

"Elizabeth, daughter of Jacob Huber, departed this life at the home of her father. She was born 27th March, 1734, and was married the 7th November, 1752, to Heinrich Wilhelm Stiegel; died February 3, 1758."

Dr. Stieling, one of the most laborious workers on his biography, notes a singular coincidence, that Elizabeth Furnace, started in 1757, was finally shut down in 1857, after running exactly one hundred years; and that the church building which he helped to erect in the town of which he was founder was razed the same year, 1857.

An Early Iron "Trust."

The Stedmans were associated with him in the original purchase of Elizabeth; and among him and them they rapidly acquired other lands—with resourcefulness of great modern enterprises which seek to assemble and control the sources of their raw materials. The sagacious contemporary methods of the Standard Oil Company and the United States Steel Corporation were anticipated by Stiegel when he collected in his purchase

3,200 acres of farm lands hereabouts, and mountain and forest acreage aggregating 7,000. Like the modern trust—decried as an “octopus”—he knew “when to take occasion by the hand”—and he was wise as they.

Stiegel was churchly. He was not of the “sect” Germans who have so largely peopled Lancaster county—differentiating it from the Pennsylvania-German—Lutheran, Reformed and Democrat—of Berks and Lehigh—but of the “high German” Lutheran stock, who did not translate Reformation into revolution, but felt they had simply purified the church and “had kept the faith” delivered to the saints.

Hence his active participation in and generous patronage of that historic Brickerville Church, which is one of the objective points of this picnic pilgrimage. Lutheranism took root here in 1730. The edifice you see there now was built in 1808, supplanting an earlier second church. Both it and Zion Reformed Church, a little distant and founded in 1740, were used as hospitals during the Revolutionary War.

Stiegel drafted a constitution for this church in 1769; he was always its active member and generous patron. The patriarchal Henry Melchoir Muhlenberg in his visitation to it was a guest at the Stiegel mansion. When fortune turned against him its parsonage afforded Stiegel a home; and, though his remains lie in an unknown and unmarked tomb, the best-founded traditions locate his grave beside his wife in the Bricker-ville Lutheran churchyard. He encouraged religious devotions among his employes and enforced them in his household.

His early wedded experience was brief. His first wife died February 3, 1758. One of his stove plates has this inscription:

"H. Whlm Stiegel Und Compagni for Elizabeth."

More striking evidence of his devotion was that he would not remarry until he found a congenial helpmeet whose name also was Elizabeth. She was a Holtz; and their wedding ring, still in the family, is inscribed:

"H. W. Stiegel and Elizabeth Holtz-in."

The affix indicates a female, as Mrs. Bricker was called Bricker-in. Though he died early, he also outlived his second wife.

Art Work in Iron.

The modern stove is a comparatively recent evolution. For centuries the blazing fire of the open hearth was the best approved means of domestic heating. The so-called "old-fashioned Dutch oven" was an iron enclosure containing the edibles put into the embers and they were cooked by the enveloping coals. Then came the fire back, the stove plate, the Franklin stove, until the six and eight-plate stove provided a piece of furniture, useful and ornamental, which served the double purpose of cooking and heating. Finally, here Stiegel first accomplished the complete ten-plate stove, which lasted for a hundred years as the perfection of household art and use. An uneffaced scar on my right hand inflicted fifty-eight years ago, recalls an incident that impressed upon my memory, as well as my body, the efficiency and intensity of this domestic institution.

Albeit in that day of the artisan and artificer the creation of this article was much more than a mechanical achievement. The plates, which, when fitted together, made a stove, were the product of the sculptor as well as the founder. After the fashion of the contemporary tile-maker and the printer, the stove moulder selected scriptural themes for his composition; and, accordingly, there were perpetuated in these castings treatment of the old familiar Bible stories of Adam and Eve, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Joseph, Jonah, Moses, David, Goliath, Ruth and other Hebrew celebrities, until now there is a distinct literature on this subject. Under the erudite direction of Henry C. Mercer and the generous patronage of B. F. Fackenthal, Jr., both of the Bucks County Historical Society, the illustrated History of Stove Plates—Stiegel's conspicuous in the collection will be a work of rare merit and inestimable value. With pardonable pride in his achievement Stiegel inscribed on some of his more notable stove plates:

"Baron Stiegel is der Mann
Der die offen giesen Kann."

His Prosperous Time.

Had Stiegel contented himself with the mastery of Elizabeth, his romantic career—than which none is more pathetic and picturesque in the history of Colony and Commonwealth—would have culminated in abiding triumph. The lure of urban life and greater civic splendor of State ensnared him. In 1760 he had seventy-five men at work here; there were twenty-five tenant houses on this estate; the axe of the wood-chopper rang through these forests and the smoke of the charcoal-burner's pit floated from every hillside.

Prosperity tempted him to larger venture. The Stedman property to the westward, on the Chiques, invited exploration. Lottery schemes promoted land development in that day; Brickerville church gratefully acknowledges a contribution of twenty-five tickets from Stiegel. He bought a third interest in the tract to which he gave the name Manheim. He built the great house, later known as the Arndt property, for which he imported the English bricks, still to be seen standing in the south wall, and had them hauled from Philadelphia to Manheim. Rich tapestries, preserved in part in the Pennsylvania Historical Society, covered the interior walls; decorative Deft tiles—of which I am privileged to exhibit a specimen to you—adorned the mantels and fireplaces. The wainscoting was gorgeous; and the balcony cupola was spacious enough to accommodate the full band of musicians whose strains greeted his arrival at or sounded his departure from the court residence. This domestic extravagance was followed by his erection of glass works in Manheim, the edifice for which was a dome-shaped structure, also of English bricks, ninety feet high, spacious enough for a four-horse team to turn inside of it. Skilled workmen had to be imported, for it was the original glass works of America; and, though the fastidious Franklin spoke of its product as coarse and common, the Stiegel glass rings true to this day; pitchers, salt cellars, vases and glasses of this fabrication are eagerly sought and highly cherished by collectors.

By 1770 he owned all of Manheim; and when he rode in coach and four, with postillions and outriders, to Elizabeth, his approach was heralded by salutes from yon Cannon Hill. It is also related that he lived in constant terror of attack upon himself, and always had a pack of highly-trained hounds run before his cavalcade to scent any danger that might be lurking in front of him. He became widely known as one of the rich men and foremost captains of industry in Pennsylvania. Shares in the Stiegel Company, which widely extended its operations in iron-making, were eagerly sought. He entertained lavishly, and though he did not himself have Washington here, as tradition has it, his successor, Robert Coleman, is said to have welcomed "The Father of His Country," as a guest of Elizabeth. Any doubting Thomas may be shown the room—if not the bed—in which he slept and snored. Five miles north of where we are assembled, Schaefferstown way, he built a tower fifty feet square at the bottom, and tapering to a ten-foot top, where spacious banquet halls underlay cosy bed chambers, so that true baronial entertainment could be afforded his guests and retainers.

Collapse of the Barony.

His local extravagances were supplemented by frequent and costly trips to Europe, taking out of his business as much as a thousand pounds for one of these journeys. When the clouds of Revolutionary trouble first overcast the sky his troubles began with the embarrassment of some of his Loyalist customers and debtors, whose credit suffered because of their lack of sympathy with the Colonies. Stiegel was suspected and his son was accused of pro British sympathy, and though from this he recovered, the derangement of business, his too manifold ventures and personal extravagances involved him in bankruptcy and he could only clear himself by a brief term of imprisonment, then and long after one of the penalties of debt.

After a few months in jail he was discharged the night before Christmas, 1774, stripped of his Manheim property, but retaining some encumbered interests here at Elizabeth, which was leased to Robert Coleman from 1776 to 1783.

That Stiegel was henceforth subject to frequent distress is manifest from a letter to Jasper Yeates about this time, in possession of the president of our society. It runs thus:

E. I. January 24th, 1775.

Dear Sir—I told you last week that Conrad Mark had agreed to take up the action, which he did, but since sent a few lines he would not stand to it. Now, sir! you know my poor situation all I have is Trough the Indulgence of the assignee and judgment creditors and the charity of my friends, and as I am not in any business have enough to do to maintain me and family with what little I have to do, and besides he has no more right than any other creditor after I assigned all my estate. Let me, therefore, beg of you for the sake of me and my poor family to get him to drop the action which I believe he will do on your advice—I hope to get in business as soon as Times will Turn. In the mean time I hope you will act my friend, and as soon as I get able shall make satisfaction. Remain.

Your most obed't Hble Servant,

HENRY WM. STIEGEL.

To Jasper Yeates, Esq., by a friend at Lancaster.

The war which ensued later gave Elizabeth Furnace work at supplying cannon, shot and shell. One of Washington's chief concerns, especially during the Pennsylvania campaign and encampment, was to maintain access to the sources whence the weapons of war were supplied. Lack of arms and ammunition was a frequent cause of distress to the Colonial armies; and during the Valley Forge encampment, especially, the Commander guarded and kept open the path to Henry's gun-making establishment in Lancaster, his powder supply at Kimberton and the furnaces and forges like Warwick, Elizabeth and of all this region, whence he looked for cannon and shot. Forge men were exempted from militia service to make "salt pans" and other essential army supplies. But by 1778 Stiegel's order ceased; his creditors pressed him and he gave up his business battle, crushed and penniless. He found sanctuary in the parsonage of the church which he had so lavishly patronized; he surveyed, taught music and exercised other talents for a livelihood. In 1780 he craved and was given permission to occupy his tower near Schaefferstown, and he taught school in a little building nearby. He thence removed to Charming Forge, taught school and kept the forge books, maintaining a cheerful disposition ever, amid associations that keenly contrasted his later conditions with his earlier estate. His wife died in 1782, while visiting Philadelphia; he survived her scarcely a year, and died at fifty-three years of age. Though in all probability he was buried by the side of his wife in the Brickerville Lutheran graveyard, his last resting place is unmarked and unidentified; and, to a certainty, "no man knoweth of his sepulchre unto this day."

Rise of the Grubbs and Colemans.

His more astute and vigorous contemporaries flourished while he waned. The Grubbs, whose pioneer, Peter, had discerned the possibilities of the Furnace Hills, built their furnace at Cornwall, in 1742, assembled all the elements of iron-making, acquired great tracts of mountain land for coaling, until by 1783 their possessions extended over ten thousand acres. The name of Cornwall came from their English home; and Grubb's Landing, on the Delaware, near Wilmington, still records the place they first touched American soil. When Peter Grubb's estate descended, in 1783, two-thirds to his elder and one-third to the younger son, it included with Cornwall the Hopewell forge in this township.

That same year saw Robert Coleman elected to the Pennsylvania Legislature, thus beginning a career of public service which included twenty years of tenure as an associate or lay Judge of the county, through which he steadily rose to become the leading citizen of Lancaster county and foremost ironmaster of the country.

Later Curtis Grubb acquired Cornwall and 6,520 acres; and Peter Grubb, Jr., got Hopewell and 3,741 acres. As early as 1798 Robert Coleman owned half of Mount Hope and Hopewell, and in a later division Hopewell Forges, with 2,311 acres, fell to him, and Mount Hope, with 2,307 acres, to Henry Bates Grubb. That these large holdings of mountain and woodland should remain after a century and a quarter substantially intact, great natural parks, is a cause for congratulation and an eminent public service.

Robert Coleman first obtained by purchase—May 9, 1781—a sixth of the great Cornwall estate from Peter Grubb, 3d., and the Coleman interests finally grew to five-sixths. Meanwhile Daniel Benezet had foreclosed on Stiegel's interest in Elizabeth; the Stedmans had sold theirs to John Dickinson, and, in 1794, Robert Coleman became sole owner of this furnace property, comprising ten thousand acres. He had bought Speedwell and its thousand acres nearly ten years earlier, from James Old, to whose daughter, Ann, he was married October 4, 1773, in Reading, where he had started as clerk to the Prothonotary of Berks county, being an especially expert penman. When he died, August 14, 1825, he was Lancaster county's only millionaire, and it has recorded the death of no other since—though I understand some of our fellow members are preparing to take that much with them on their heavenly journey, if they can find a pocket in their shrouds.

In course of time, the mutations of ownership at Cornwall and the muniments of title of both the Grubb and Coleman estates contributed no little to the gaiety and variety of jurisprudence in Pennsylvania; and the ensuing litigation was protracted, oftentimes almost romantically curious. It is enough for us to know that Moun. Hope, through A. Bates Grubb, and, later the late Clement B. Grubb, ultimately lodged in the ownership of our fellow member and townswoman, Miss Daisy Grubb, where it is the seat of gracious hospitality. Speedwell, which fell to the Robert W. Coleman heirs, became as famous as a horse breeding farm as it was well known as a forge. The Elizabeth estates are maintained by Mr. B. Dawson and Miss Fanny Coleman, to whose courtesy we are largely indebted for this day's enjoyment. Long may the present care and control last; and may these great areas of native beauty be kept unspoiled!

An Old Church.

Brickerville Church, so associated with the Stiegel name, and neighbor to Elizabeth all these years, is one of the early outposts of the Lutheran faith. Few religious organizations have done more to make and write local history. Founded in 1730, its story is almost co-eval with the county. Its church lands were granted by the Penns. To it the patriarchal Henry Melchoir Muhlenberg made pious pilgrimage; and when it was known as the "Canastocken" region, here amid the snows of February, 1762, he preached the gospel of contentment from the text, "The meek shall eat and be satisfied."

Here the contumacious Peter Mischler, disturber of religious harmony, rebelled and repented in 1769; here died in his early history Daniel Kuhn, gifted son of that Adam Simon Kuhn, magistrate of Lancaster and vestryman of its glorious old Trinity; here came Frederick August Muhlenberg, in 1780, beaming benevolently on Stiegel's gift of lottery tickets; here was the centre of that prolonged church fight—1876 to 1886—which lasted longer than the war period of the Revolution added to that of the Rebellion, over which four juries wrestled and Courts became hopelessly entangled.

Now all is peace! The voices of churchly discord are silenced; the very air a solemn stillness holds. Where once the fierce flame leaped to kiss the sky, soft breezes murmur through the harp strings of the clinging vine and overarching bough; and where the hot cinders scorched the seared earth, the velvet moss and star-eyed daisy now cover deep the footprints of the grimy toiler.

The "Eternal Hunter."

But over these rugged hills and through these dark ravines there rides on stormy nights a phantom horseman and behind yelps a ghostly pack following "Der Ewige Jaeger." Far up, near the sources of the Sec Loch, and where Cornwall's fires light the darkest skies, mother's cheeks yet blanch as they wake prattling children to tell "the legend of the hounds," when, high above the tempest's shrieks, are heard the horn and bay of that elfish cavalcade. Like Sir Walter Scott's tale of the Pacific pirates, in which

Panama's maids shall long grow pale,
When Risingham inspires the tale.
Chill's dark matrons long shall tame
The froward child with Bertram's name.

So abide in these hills the traditions of that roystering master of the furnace and forge—who, long before the Olds and Stiegels, the Grubbs and Colemans, laid foundations that were obliterated when the walls and wheels of Hopewell and Speedwell, Elizabeth and Cornwall, were reared. His line had long perished when they came; but how he delved and drank, and rode and cursed, wantoned and caroused; how he drove to cruel death all his kennel, even at last the milk-white Flora, ever caressing the brutal hand that bruised her—all this has been the ground work of stirring verse by one of Pennsylvania's first lyric and dramatic poets.* Out of the grisly past and of these grim hills its legendary echoes float down to us as the vestiges of a barbarous day when the Tubal Cains and their half-savage retainers of a primitive civilization long ago moved through lands now peaceful scenes of pastoral beauty. Their dark shadows rest but lightly on these happy skies—even as the summer cloud of a sunnier day.

Minutes of the June Meeting

Lancaster, June 6, 1913.

President Steinman presided over the regular monthly meeting of the Lancaster County Historical Society this evening, while Miss Martha B. Clark filled the secretary's place.

Miss Bausman, the librarian, presented the following report:

Bound volumes—Wisconsin Historical Society, Proceedings for 1912; Inter-State Commerce Commission—twenty-sixth annual report; life of Rev. Michael Schlatter, from Franklin and Marshall College, and six volumes of first series of Pennsylvania Archives.

Magazines and Pamphlets—German-American Annals, Annals of Iowa, Linden Hall Echo, International Conciliation, Bulletin of Carnegie Library, Pittsburgh; Bulletin of New York Public Library, Bulletin of Grand Rapids Public Library, two numbers; large number of our Society pamphlets, Pennsylvania Magazine pamphlets and a number of miscellaneous pamphlets, from Franklin and Marshall College; Constitution and Laws of the Sun Fire Company, 1833; several old newspapers from Miss Mary E. Smith, of Intercourse, Lancaster county; anti-slavery constitutional amendment, framed picture, from Rev. Dr. C. Elvin Haupt; postcard of Conestoga wagon (Gingrich's, of this city), used in trip from Wilmington to Erie, from D. B. Landis.

A vote of thanks was extended the donors.

Charles G. Baker, Esq., and Henry C. Carpenter were elected to membership and the name of Prof. John S. Simons, of Marietta, proposed.

Mr. Hensel, for the committee having in charge the suggestion of an outdoor celebration the coming fall, said that he had been in correspondence with members of the family of the late Gen. John F. Reynolds, and they feel disposed to contribute a bronze memorial medallion portrait, to be placed upon a granite shaft or slab, and he had hopes that some trophy cannon might be secured from the Government for the purpose of directing a fit memorial. Inasmuch as the Mexican War trophies were to be placed in Buchanan Park, and there was in contemplation a monument to Buchanan for that site, he thought that the Long Park would be the better place for the Reynolds memorial, and that sometime in September would be a favorable date for the celebration of "Lancaster County in the War for the Union." His committee was continued, with full power to appoint sub-committees and carry out the project.

It was decided to hold the annual outing of the society at Elizabetn, visiting the Brickerville Church and other points of interest. The following committee will arrange for the outing: W. U. Hensel, A. K. Hostetter and L. B. Herr.

The society received invitations to attend the Feast of Roses at Mannheim to-morrow, and the reunion at Donegal Church, June 18.

The paper of the evening was submitted by Horace L. Haldeman on the subject "Thaddeus Stevens and the Southern States," and it proved highly entertaining. It was read by Miss Clark.

SKETCH OF THE LIFE OF LUDWIG REINGRUBER, 1836-1885

Ludwig Reingruber, the Bavarian artist, who was a citizen of Lancaster, Pennsylvania, from 1870 to 1883, was the son of Maximilian and Frances Reingruber. He was born August 11, 1836, at Ratisbon on the Danube. Ratisbon, from the eleventh to the fifteenth century, was the foremost flourishing city in Southern Germany, and from 1663 to 1810 was the permanent seat of the Imperial Diet. This city occupies an important position in the history of mediaeval art, and in it remain many remarkable structures of that period.

There is the Cathedral of St. Peter, with richly sculptured portals, glorious stained glass and elegant open towers. There is a Rathhaus with fine facade. In the "Street of Ambassadors" many buildings are ornamented with picturesque armorial bearings. Across the Blue Danube stands the Walhalla, a magnificent German Pantheon, erected by King Ludwig.

Seventy miles north of Ratisbon is the city of Nuremberg (home of Albrecht Drurer and Peter Vischer), and about the same distance southward lies Munich, capital of Bavaria, with its magnificent treasure houses, richly filled with works of classic, mediaeval and modern art.

His Early Days.

Ratisbon was Reingruber's birthplace and early home; Munich at the period of its greatest art activity was well known to him; and Nuremberg he was doubtless familiar with. In such richly historic and artistic environment, our artist spent his early life, details of which are but little known. In the matter of his early education, we are told he was largely self-taught. Having chosen the career of artist and decorator, he served a rigorous German apprenticeship, compared with which, he afterward said, "an American apprenticeship is as a golden dream." We have learned from German artists, who were his contemporaries, that the young Reingruber was first honor student in both day and night art classes and worked under George Stindt and Jacob Filse. Afterward, as a fresco painter, he found employment in Munich, Leipsic and Vienna, acquiring a thorough mastery of the principles and technique of his profession.

Came to America.

In 1868 our artist, aged thirty-two years, came to America, and we learn of him first in Erie, where he executed interior decorative work, frescoing the Opera House, public halls and churches.

And now we chronicle the happy circumstance which accounts for his coming to Lancaster.

While decorating a church in Erie, of which Rev. A. L. Bentze was pastor, he met Miss Mary Kiehl, of our city, who won the heart of the Bavarian artist, and their marriage followed, February 27, 1870, in Lancaster. They returned to Erie, that he might complete work there, and came back to Lancaster in June of the same year. Reingruber must have been impressed with the absence of an artistic atmosphere in Lancaster, although he probably felt at home among the Germans of our city. How provincial and barren of ornament and picturesqueness must the Lancaster of 1870 have appeared to a native of Ratisbon (a city of about the same size), where there was so much of artistic and historic interest. There was here, at the time, of course, the Trinity Lutheran Church, that remarkably fine example of Gregorgian architecture, the Court House and Prison. There were the swinging hotel signs (now unfortunately gone), and the carved wooden image of Robert Fulton, over the entrance of the "Hall," which bore his name. That was about all of architecture and sculptural significance. The interiors of the churches were Puritanically bare of ornament, on the walls and ceilings. Reingruber, however, caught sight of a sign in front of the Examiner printing office, representing a pair of hunting dogs, cleverly painted by Charles Wise, sign painter and aeronaut, whom he immediately sought and became associated with. They, together, soon afterward executed the decorations of the Cooper House office and "tap room," producing an excellent work "in oil," principal features of which were large hunting scenes ensconced in stucco-effect panels, between which were graceful festoons of fruit and flowers. Their next work was the decorating of the interior of the Lutheran Church, New Holland. After that work, Wise discontinued decorative work and Reingruber started for himself, upon a career, which, by his marked ability and indefatigable industry, led to the artistic enrichment of many churches and public buildings of Lancaster and neighboring cities, including Philadelphia.

Character of Decorative Work.

The general characteristic of Reingruber's style of interior decorative work, whether in church, civic building or residence, was a scheme of panel treatment with enrichments, all in stucco effect of classic style, introducing within the panels pictorial representations of religious or other appropriate subjects. The latter he painted directly on the plaster (not as at present the custom, on canvas, to be afterward attached). Adopting this general plan, he followed the masters of the Renaissance, and introduced into Lancaster a style of artistic and pictorial decoration not previously seen here, but which is one of the glories of the Old World.

Church Interiors Decorated.

Among the first churches decorated by Reingruber was Zion Lutheran Church, on East Vine street, about 1873 in the classic manner described above. The strong representations of Luther and Melancthon, which were part of the scheme, were unfortunately destroyed when the church was remodeled.

The decoration of the interior of St. Anthony's Catholic Church, on East Orange street, under the rectorship of Rev. Anthony F. Kaul, was begun in the spring of 1874. One can well imagine the delight of Reingruber when he received this much-desired commission, which gave him the opportunity to execute a richly artistic church interior. The stucco effect treatment, with pictorial enrichments, was followed. The subjects about the chancel and upon the ceiling were beautifully and artistically rendered, especially the reproduction of Correg-gio's "Madonna of the Night," at left of the altar, and the series of medalion heads of saints in the ceiling, which are in the nature of ideal portraits. This work was completed in June, 1875, and the many visitors from other sections of the State who were competent judges pronounced it a work of high character, and it won for Reingruber the reputation of a master decorator.

The interior of St. Stephen's Lutheran Church, Duke and Church streets, was frescoed by our German artist, and, when afterwards remodeled, the pictorial work was studiously retained. Reingruber decorated St. James' Episcopal Church under the guidance of Rev. Watson, who was much interested in historic church decoration. William H. Miller, grandson of Jacob Elcholtz, assisted in this work. Reingruber frescoed the interior of a Catholic Church at Lamokin, near Wilmington, Del., in the chancel of which he painted a large representation of the Crucifixion. Among many other churches frescoed was a Catholic church in Columbia.

His Decorations of Civic Buildings.

In Lancaster Reingruber frescoed the Masonic Temple and Fulton Hall. In Millersville he decorated the chapel of the State Normal School, which the artist considered one of his best works; in Columbia he frescoed the Opera House in stucco effect of classic design, introducing, in panels, representations of the Muses; in Marietta, he decorated the Odd Fellows Hall; in Erie, he frescoed the Opera House. In other places, work of similar character was done by the Bavarian artist, and, even after going to St. Louis, in 1883, he was invited to bid on decorative work in Erie, on the decoration of the Pennsylvania State Hospital and on other proposed work.

Residential and Other Work.

Residences were frescoed by our artist in a high-class manner, including those of Samuel H. Reynolds, R. H. Brubaker and the Haldemans of Columbia and Chickies. He also painted landscapes, game, fruit and flower pieces, and even signs and curtains.

Portraits by Reingruber.

In addition to all the church, civic and other work, Reingruber found time to execute a great number of portraits (a partial list of which is appended to this sketch). His style or manner was acquired before the broad, impressionistic style swept Europe. His handling was conservative. His colorings were those of the Munich school of the times. He was a great admirer of the works of Eicholtz, which he delighted to copy, doubtless gaining greater breadth of handling from the experience. We are indebted to Reingruber for preserving the visages of many of Lancaster's most prominent people of the period. He also executed portraits of a number of dignitaries of the Catholic Church of Philadelphia and elsewhere. In St. Louis, Judge Krumm was among his "sitters." He rendered, in pastel, a portrait of "Mary Anderson" for his studio which is said to have been much admired. He painted, in 1871, portraits of himself and his wife. At the recent Portraiture Exhibition in Lancaster (1912) he was represented by portraits, in oil, of Rev. Anthony F. Kaul, Ellsha Reynolds, Esq., Dr. M. L. Herr, Hon. O. J.

In the Studio.

Reingruber occupied various studios while in Lancaster. In 1878 he was tenanted in the large upper room of the First National Bank, where, we are prone to believe he was lured by the classic architecture of the building. It was in this studio that the writer often visited him. There he would unfold his ready mind, ardently stating his ideas of artistic and other matters. He was an interesting talker, speaking English fluently and with little foreign accent. He often contrasted German and American ideals and customs, as when he noted how our people "roosted" about the soldiers' monument, instead of reverencing it, in the manner of his countrymen, as if it were a shrine.

Having been given a copy of "Hunt's Talk on Art" by the writer, Reingruber was so enthusiastic over the sayings of the New Englander that he marked the passages which impressed him. He then instructed his apprentice to copy those passages. After the young man had accomplished his task, it was discovered that Reingruber had marked practically the entire book, the apprentice being overwhelmed by his labors.

Reingruber—The Man.

A remarkable man was Ludwig Reingruber—he had distinctively the Teutonic spirit—strong, persistent, idealistic, romantic, and, in the American environment, he seemed to delight in a certain liberty which no circumstances could brook. It is interesting to note that Ludwig Reingruber was from Bavaria, where men delight in expressing their ideas and sense of the beautiful in plastic art, in music and in poetic form. He had a realizing sense of his ability; he was yet modest.

He was indefatigable, working nights and Sunday, and often, under great difficulties and being deeply conscientious, he would destroy much work so that it might be executed in a better manner. It is difficult to learn how far his pictorial works were original conceptions, and how far adaptations from classic or accepted prototypes, but much of it was of a high order and admirably executed.

Apart from his ability as an artist and decorator, one is deeply impressed by his sterling character, and it is with reverence for his memory that we note his extraordinary devotion to his wife and children.

After Reingruber had been a highly valued citizen of Lancaster for thirteen years, he went, in 1883, with his family, to St. Louis, Mo. There his wife had relatives, and he hoped to be successful in securing commissions for portraits and decorative work, especially as there was in that city a strong German element. Soon after reaching his new home came impairment of the sight of the artist (whose eyes had served him so well). This was a great affliction, and he lived only two years after his arrival.

On May 28, 1885, Ludwig Reingruber, Bavarian artist, passed to the Great Beyond. His earthly body was brought to Lancaster for its final resting place, and Monterey Lodge of Odd Fellows, No. 242 (of which he became a member in 1875), performed the last rites at their hall on South Queen street, and interment was made at Zion Cemetery.

We of Lancaster, in appreciating the artistically beautiful decorative work done by Reingruber in our churches and public buildings, may well regard that work as a memorial of an accomplished and remarkable German artist.

Minutes of September Meeting

Lancaster, Pa., Sept. 5, 1913.

The Lancaster County Historical Society resumed its sessions for the winter on Friday evening, and as a fitting opening to the season's activities, Walter C. Hager read a most entertaining paper on Ludwig Reingruber, a Lancaster portrait artist, who had many subjects in this section and a number of examples of whose work were on display at the recent Portraiture Exhibition.

The attendance of members this evening was most encouraging and the society starts the work for another winter most auspiciously. In the absence of the president, Mr. F. R. Diefenderffer, the vice president, presided. Miss Martha B. Clark was the secretary.

Miss Lottie M. Bausman, the librarian, reported the following additions during the summer:

Bound volumes—Eleven volumes, Debates of the Pennsylvania Convention; Ohio Archæological and Historical Society Publications—Vol. IV.; Register of the Commandery of the State of Pennsylvania; two volumes, Pennsylvania and the Centennial Exposition—gifts from Franklin and Marshall College; Calendar of the Papers of John Jordan Crittenden, from the Library of Congress; Twenty-eighth Annual Report of the Bureau of American Ethnology, from the Smithsonian Institution; Smull's Legislative Hand-Book for 1871, from Mr. Herbert Hurst; History of Berks County, Volume of Egle's Notes and Queries, by purchase; Bulletin 54 of Bureau of American Ethnology.

Magazines and pamphlets—The Pennsylvania Magazine (three numbers); Annals of Iowa; American Philosophical Society (two numbers); American Catholic Historical Society Records; German-American Annals; Linden Hall Echo (2 numbers); The Gettysburg Campaign of 1863, from Historical Society of Dauphin County; International Conciliation; Municipal Reference Library—City of New York; Classified Catalogue of the Carnegie Library, Pittsburgh (Part III.); Perry's Victory, Centennial Souvenir; Memorial Meeting in honor of the late Dr. John Shaw Billings; Bulletin of New York Public Library (3 numbers); Bulletin of Grand Rapids Public Library (3 numbers); Bulletin of Carnegie Library, Pittsburgh (2 numbers); 17th Annual Report of Carnegie Library, Pittsburgh; Michigan Libraries, from S. H. Ranck; several almanacs from F. R. Diffenderffer.

Piece of wood from Perry's flagship "Niagara," sent by E. J. Harple, Tampa, Fla.; six pieces of colonial paper money, from Mrs. A. B. Bausman, Millersville; list of members of Fremont-Lincoln Club for city and county, from W. R. Riddle; badge worn by the veterans of Lancaster city and county at the fiftieth anniversary of the Battle of Gettysburg, July 1-4, 1913, from George H. Rothermel; Minutes of the Lancaster County Agricultural and Horticultural Society from its organization in 1866 to its dissolution in 1905, with charter, from F. R. Diffenderffer; list of Standing Committee of Union Fire Company of Lancaster, from J. Lane Reed, Esq., Dayton, Ohio.

Prof. John S. Simons, of Marietta, was elected to membership and the names of the following proposed: John C. Carter, 32 East Walnut street, this city; Rev. Frank G. Bossert, of Mt. Joy; G. S. Danner, Manheim; E. J. Harple, Tampa, Florida.

The society acknowledged the receipt of the invitation to participate in Columbia's Old Home Week celebration. Quite a large number of members will take part in the festivities. Monday, October 13, will be historical day and the society will be represented on the programme by H. Frank Eshleman, Esq., and B. C. Atlee, Esq.

Mr. Hager's paper attracted much attention and was highly enjoyed by the members. He gave a very entertaining sketch of Reingruber's life and the work he did in this city, where, for a number of years, he was recognized as one of Lancaster's leading artists. In addition to portrait work he was an expert decorator and many churches and public halls were the scene of his art.

Following the paper the members indulged in an interesting discussion about the paper and other matters for the welfare of the society. The coming meetings promise to be of great value to the members and the general public, which is always welcome to join in these monthly gatherings.

Hempfield: The Beginning of Columbia

On the occasion of the observance of the one hundred and twenty-fifth anniversary of the laying out and disposal of lots in the town of Columbia, by Samuel Wright, it seems to me fitting that I, his senior grandson, shall put on record an authentic statement of the origin and title of the property in question; and shall give some account of the settlement at this point and of the original settlers.

In the year of our Lord, 1492, as our earliest teaching impressed upon our memories, the Great Discoverer crossed the ocean; and nearly two hundred years later—March 4, 1681, to be exact—Charles II. of England granted to William Penn, our honored founder, proprietorship of the territory now comprising our State. But notwithstanding we derive from Columbus our name, and from Charles our title of ownership, it would be unduly fastidious to hark back so far for our datum point. To begin at the very beginning of our separate territorial existence, however, it will be necessary to come forward but twenty years from the last-named date—to 1701—the year in which the pretender succeeded his father, James II., in his claim to the English throne, and in which the Act of Settlement was passed by the English Parliament by which, on the death of childless Anne, the crown should pass to the House of Hanover. I thus identify our time of origin with important historical events in our Old Home.

In the year 1701, then—17th, 18th of 11th month—by lease and release, "William Penn, Esq., proprietor and governor in chief of said province" (Pennsylvania) "did grant release and confirm unto one George Beale, of Surrey, in Great Britain, Yeoman, the quantity of three thousand acres of land, clear of Indian encumbrances, in the said province of Pennsylvania, to hold, etc., etc., * * * under the yearly quitrent of one penny sterling for each hundred acres of said land, payable to the Chief Lord of the fee thereof after the expiration of seven years from the locating and the seating of the same."

The royal grant to Penn—comprehensive, but indefinite—was of a broad virgin territory, unsettled, uncultivated and unknown. Charles named the province Pennsylvania, after his great Admiral, William Penn's father, and in 1682 the proprietor came over in person and took possession of his vast estate. While Penn's broad-minded statesmanship is shown in the unprecedented liberality of his laws for the government of this new land, it is not to be supposed that he did not take into consideration its pecuniary resources. No private means would suffice for undivided proprietorship, therefore he offered a market.

At this day our Founder would be called a promoter; and on a large scale he did promote a Province. He granted, as shown above, territory to what were then known as "adventurers." The name was figurative, representing a class of speculators, successors in modified measure of the old-time capitalists—merchants and nobles—who staked the freebooters of Elizabeth's "heroic" days (the genuine adventurers), the scourers of the sea for grain in treasure ships and in general piracy. This later adventuring, however, was legitimate, and was about equivalent to our speculative investment in mines and other sources of hoped-for revenue.

Our George Beale then was an adventurer, and with many another, doubtless, sent good money into the wilderness in hope of large return from the investment in the promises of the wonderful new country. This enterprise might be called a "blind pool," for the lands conveyed were unseated—that is, of no definite locality; lands thereafter to be surveyed to the purchasers at their demand. And, moreover, back of Penn's title was the aboriginal Indian title, to be extinguished by negotiation and treaty. In the case of this particular tract—the Beale purchase—the treaty that cleared away the Indian claim was of 1700, supplementing a previous treaty and assuring to Penn title to lands on both sides of the Susquehanna River.

George Beale's adventure brought him no return until October, 1718, when he sold his entire claim to Jeremiah Langhorne, to whom, 25th of fifth month, 1717, Richard Hill, Isaac Norris and James Logan, Commissioners, had issued a warrant to "Locate and Lay Out" to him five hundred acres of the above tract. Langhorne was one of the Penns' surveyors, and must have had practical knowledge of the choice of lands of the Province. He chose these 500 acres wisely, and on 19-20 August, 1726, conveyed the same, by lease and release, to Robert Barber, of Chester, who, on August 31, 1726, deeded 100 acres of the land to Susanna Wright, and on 20 September, 1726, 150 acres to John Wright, retaining 250 acres of his purchase in his own name. On August 23, 1726, James Logan conveyed to Samuel Blunston, of Darby, 300 acres of land; and to complete record of titles of lands, parts of which eventually came to be included in the limits of the Borough of Columbia, I will cite subsequent purchases by Blunston—on January 10, 1733, from James Logan additional 300 acres, and on June 2, 1741, by patent, from John and Richard Penn, 225 acres. These three tracts were contiguous, and joined Susanna Wright's land on the south. All quantities cited carried the customary allowance for roads of six acres per hundred.

I have thus far confined my memoranda to the land from which the area of present Columbia was carved. The original settlers are now to be considered. These were three—John Wright, Samuel Blunston, Robert Barber. Having in my possession the papers of my family, my record of John Wright will be the most complete. He emigrated "From Manchester in the Kingdom of Great Britain * * * I removed from thence to the province of Pennsylvania the 15th of ye 2 mo., 1714," to quote the family Bible. The date being old style, the month would have been May. It is on record in "Certificates of Removal, Philadelphia Monthly Meeting," that the certificate of "John Wright, wife Patience, and four children. Dated 1 mo., 16, 1713, from Hartshaw Mo. Mtg., Lancashire, England, received, 5 mo., 30 1714." This is again old style, and the month corresponds with August. It must have been filed soon after arrival on this side, the exact date of which event is not on record. He first settled with his family in Chester, where he had effected the purchase of a plantation before his coming; and where his youngest child, James, was born the year of his arrival—1714—the first “native-born” of the family.

Samuel Blunston was American-born—September 2, 1689—at Darby, Chester county, in the province of Pennsylvania. He was the son of John Blunston, of Derbyshire, England, who emigrated thence in 1682, and was a close friend of the proprietor, a member of his Council and of the Provincial Assembly. Samuel, at the time of the Susquehanna purchase, resided at Darby, where he had married Sarah Bilton, a widow well-left. His means, besides, were ample. Both he and John Wright were then and for many years afterwards members of the Assembly. He died at Hempfield December 13, 1745.

Robert Barber preceded John Wright as an immigrant to the province. He is recorded as having come “about 1699,” supposedly from Yorkshire, and at the time of his purchase of the cited 500 acres from Langhorne he was a citizen of Chester. It is a tradition that he, in his capacity of Assessor of Chester county, became acquainted with and selected the land purchased for himself and the Wrights. It is supposed that he preceded his two friends to the Susquehanna; but his final removal with his family, from Chester, could not have been earlier than 1728.

The only record of the actual change of residence, or, rather, preparation therefor, is a “Journal of our removal from Chester and Darby to Conestoga in order to begin a settlement at Shawanah town on Susquehanna upon the 12th day of September, 1726. In company John Wright, Samuel Blunston, H. Scarlet, L. Ryley, John Devel, Prince, an Indian; Negro Peter, Negro Sal.” This is manuscript in the hand of Susanna Wright, arranged as a title-page of a bound book, evidently intended to be followed by a record of this memorable event in the lives of these families—the removal from civilization to a comparative wilderness. Unfortunately the design was not pursued beyond this title page, the book being filled with various, mostly undated, memoranda of expenditures on the journey and elsewhere, details of building material, time checks of workmen, etc. Unusual items of contents, always in Susanna's hand, (some of the manuscript is Samuel Blunston's) are a transcript of a French grammar, and a brief glossary of Indian words.

This journey was evidently a formal taking possession of the newly-purchased land, for in October Wright and Blunston are recorded as present at the opening of the Provincial Assembly at Philadelphia. Scarlet, Ryley and Devel were supposedly mechanics left to prepare shelter for the removal of the families in the coming year. The Indian was probably a guide, and the negroes, cook and servant, slaves of Samuel Blunston. (It may here be recorded that Samuel Blunston, in his will of 1745, freed, after one year, his "negro Sal," with an annuity of five pounds; and that in Susanna Wright's "Account of Persons Laid in the Burying Grounds at Hempfield, of 1750, occurs among names of "servants of Samuel Blunston" that of "Prince, an Indian man." So these two fairly may be commemorated as among the "First Settlers.") comers. Her name will frequently recur in my paper. Her part in the colony was notable, but beyond necessary mention particulars of her life are of sufficient interest and importance to deserve a more fitting memorial.

Susanna Wright, one of the purchasers, and besides an important member of this little community, certainly shall be named among the first

Shawanah Town, as it is named above, was an abiding place on the banks of the Susquehanna of the Shawanese Indians, who, if in numbers, must have removed as a body before the coming of the Whites. A number remained, however, in the immediate neighborhood, and it was a story told to me of the old time, how our forebears and their associates of the settlement were always friends and allies of the natives. The children of the two races were playmates, and there was peace between the elders. It is a satisfaction to remember that no Indian was oppressed or allowed to want in this Quaker settlement.

There is no record of the breaking up and early cultivation of this wild country. There must have been more or less of frontier hardship going to the conversion of virgin forest into tillable and producing land. We only know that the immigrants thrived, and in the end left to their successors the goodly milk-and-honey land that has come down to us. The ambition of these mature people was a quiet country life. They modeled their houses and their customs upon those of the Old Country, and it would seem that their lines had fallen in pleasant places. It is one of "Life's Little Ironies" that these Friends, seeking here peace and a tranquil life, should fall into the turmoil of domestic warfare. The boundary dispute between Penn's descendants and Lord Baltimore, their Maryland neighbor, was still unsettled, and it happened that a collision between Cresap, a turbulent claimant under Baltimore's warrant seeking to crowd the dividing line into Penn's territory, and James Patterson, an Indian trader, holding land under Penn's grant, occurred near what is now Washington Borough, and opened a fairly serious border war. John Wright and Samuel Blunston, as magistrates, issued warrants under which some of the invaders were arrested, and this resulted in an offer of reward by the Governor of Maryland for the heads of these two agents of the Penns.

The three "Adventurers" with whom we have thus far been concerned—for surely the settling of sober, peaceful Friends among Indians, however friendly, was adventure—were men of more than ordinary character and weight. Samuel Blunston was a land surveyor and agent of the Penns. John Wright was a preacher in his society and the trusted negotiator between the proprietors and their Indian allies. Robert Barber was an energetic and enterprising citizen, in public life, before the removal to the Susquehanna. All were upon confidential terms with the Penns and with their chief agent in Philadelphia, James Logan. Upon the erection of the new county, named Lancaster after John Wright's English home county, in 1729, the three became prominent officials: John Wright was appointed Presiding Justice of the newly established Courts, Samuel Blunston Associate Justice and Prothonotary, Robert Barber Sheriff.

The writer is descended from two of these first settlers—great-great-grandson—and it appears to him justifiable to record his satisfaction in the fact that John Wright anticipated Franklin, Adams, Jefferson and all that declaratory crowd, in his pronouncement for Freedom. In 1741 a new Bench of Magistrates for the several counties of the province was appointed by the Governor; and, in consequence of opposition by them to arbitrary acts of Government, a number of the old Judges were dropped. Among these was John Wright, who had denounced the impressment of bound servants as soldiers, in the Provincial Assembly. In his final charge to the Grand Jury he bade farewell to the Court, and among his words were these: "For this cause, my friends and countrymen, for the cause of English liberty, for the standing in the civil defense of right and property, we are dismissed; and I rejoice and am heartily glad that I have been one of those who are thought worthy of displeasure." This has not the eclat of the Tea Party, but it sounds the Advance.

Samuel Blunston died September 30, 1745; Robert Barber, September 3, 1749; John Wright, 1st October, 1749. Thus three pioneers left the New Land they came to build up nearly at the same time—the senior surviving his younger brethren.

Having come with the fathers of the settlement to the end of their days, it will be well to complete the record of title to the Columbia land. On the 10th of November, 1745, John Wright conveyed to his son, James, his estate of 150 acres. Samuel Blunston, dying without issue, bequeathed to Susanna Wright a life interest in his realty, and a caveat against the probate of the will having been filed by Thomas Pearson, husband of Hannah Blunston, Samuel's niece, a compromise was effected, the parties all being Friends and averse to litigation, by which James Wright purchased from the Pearsons the undivided one-fourth part of the Blunston real estate, roughly estimated at 800 acres. Susanna Wright retained her 100 acres until her death in 1784, when it descended by testament to her nephew, Samuel, son of James Wright; excepting the "Ferry Property," of some acres, which she bequeathed to her nephews, Samuel, John, James and William. The Barber tract remained intact until a later date.

The "Ferry Property" was a part of Susanna Wright's land set apart for the erection and maintenance of the ferry, a grant for which John Wright obtained in 1730. This was a very valuable holding, which fixed the most important crossing of the mile-wide Susquehanna, and came to be known as Wright's ferry. Over this ferry passed the vast freightage and travel between the settled East and the expanding West. This made, in the open season, a busy place of the quiet settlement; yet the initial impulse of seclusion remained, and it required another generation before the value of the locality as a town site in prospect broke through the family reserve.

Thus, although Samuel Wright, on the death of James Wright in 1756, received as his share of his father's real estate the 200 Blunston acres bought from the Pearsons, it was only upon his Aunt Susan's decease and his inheritance under her will, that his hands were free. And to him came the impulse to found a town. So arrived the "day we celebrate." In 1788 a portion of the Pearson purchase and a part of Susanna Wright's land adjoining were laid out in 160 lots and were offered to "adventurers"—adventurers again—upon easy terms. There must have been something of a boom, for in a few years a busy town arose—and there you are.

The town as then laid out comprised what came to be known as Old Columbia. Subsequently, in 1795, the Ferry property was laid out and disposed of by the owners as Columbia Continued. Later John Wright laid out John Wright's addition, and his son, James Wright, Jr., laid out Columbia Extended, from lands inherited from his father and purchased from the estate of Samuel Wright. There were besides smaller additions by Barber and Epply, Rohrer and Herr, and others, mainly from the original John Wright purchase, part of which fell to the share of his grandson, at the time of the partition of James Wright's estate. These constituted Columbia borough at the date of incorporation, 1814. With the exception of a strip bordering the Canal basin, after the opening of the Pennsylvania Canal, the Bethel (Blunston) property was held intact until 1867, when the writer resurveyed and extended the borough lines and laid out for the Heises and Miffins, heirs of the Bethels, opening and extending streets, a large part of the estate included in the borough. About the same time he laid out in like manner for Green and Gossler a portion of the Robert Barber land, purchased by them from Barber's descendants—the first of this tract opened for improvement.

After the custom of the period of naming towns for great (and near-great) men, Samuel Wright called his new town Columbia. We value this historic and euphonic name (which, however, we share with how many towns and cities throughout the States?); but it has come to the writer to think that his respected grandsire had more wisely done to retain the traditional Hempfield, or to go back to the aboriginal Shawanah.

Were it not that there has been an over-indulgence in Wright, in these memoranda, I should add a few words upon the notable Susanna. Certainly an uncommon woman, about whom there has been written much fol-de-rol; with valuable appreciation by those of her time who knew her. She was the head of the settlement from the death of John Wright, her father, up to the time of her decease—its lawyer, its doctor, its general adviser.

The Whitesides of Colerain:

The Revolutionary Captain and the Con- gressman

The pioneer days of our country were a fitting school for the training of both the minds and bodies of the men and women who first helped to clear the forests and build the homes of our people. The early settlers were, perhaps, less rugged and cast in a less heroic mould than were their children who first saw the light in the then wilderness in the new world, and grew to manhood and womanhood in the open, surrounded by trials and dangers, with and against which they had to battle, and battle successfully, or perish.

Hence it seemed a wise dispensation that the destinies of our country were in the hands of this second generation when the crucial period of its history came upon us; and that fact answers the query how and why this colony was able to battle successfully with the mother country, and, in the end, to win its freedom and dedicate it forever to liberty. The County of Lancaster, as is well known, was settled in the main by three distinct classes of people. The great bulk of our population was the German and Dutch elements, who came in at different periods and under different leaderships, but all alike were of the non-resistant class, whose religious tenets and practices of life were against war and strife; and at or about the same time another class came into the southern end of our county, namely, the Friends, or Quakers, who, like the Germans, counseled peace, industry and the more lowly life. The third was a so-called Scotch-Irish race, which included many of pure English stock, and these of our county's early population were of the rugged, fearless, fighting stock.

They were of the blood of those that followed the Scottish chiefs, the English dukes and the Irish kings, in the days when all the British Isles were the great battlefield, with the clans of each and all battling for supremacy, under first one leader and then another.

When transplanted to this land of freedom, they were more generally found upon the extreme frontiers, and of and from them the armies of Washington were largely drawn. In this county, the portion selected by them lay, the one to the northwest, central about the Donegals, and the other to the southwest, central in the Drumores, Britain and Colerain. Unlike the peaceful Quaker and the Menonite, their prime object seemed to be the construction of a country and the formation of a Government, while his rather centered in the building of a home and the tillage of his land.

Restless and dauntless, this English and Scotch-Irish race battled their way to the front, and in the doing thereof developed many strong characters, and men of mark, who made their impress upon their country's history and left descendants with a like spirit, who have continued to take a prominent part in the affairs of their adopted land.

Quite by accident I stumbled upon the subject of this story in trying to fulfill a request to secure a picture of Congressman Whiteside, who served from this district in Congress two terms, about and succeeding 1815. I found there seemed to be but little of record concerning him, and at first it was even difficult to find from what parentage he came. In the course of my investigation I uncovered the story of this family, and, incidentally, brought to light the activities of many of their neighbors and other families with whom they became associated in business, connected by marriage or as comrades in the War of the Revolution. I found it so interesting that I concluded to make it the subject of a paper to this society, as it contains much that has remained hitherto unwritten.

The first Whiteside to come to this country was John Whiteside, believed to be an Englishman, who landed in Philadelphia in 1700, and he seems to have had brothers, Peter, James and William, who, however, did not follow him into this country. In 1700 John Whiteside took out a warrant for 200 acres of land, in what was then Pequea township, Chester county, now Sadsbury. This John had a son, William, who took by warrant 330 acres of land in Little Britain township in 1738, which lies immediately south of the Robert Fulton tract, and is now owned by the family of Blacks, who are lineal descendants of this John Whiteside. The farm is now in three parts, occupied by William Black, Flora Rea and Robert Black's heirs. As illustrating the activities of the neighbors who up to 1770 owned adjoining land, or were close neighbors, we find the records disclose the names of Edward Hughes, Isaac Sidwell, Colonel James Porter, General William Montgomery, James Ramsey, George Ewing, Francis Armstrong and others who afterward became prominent in the Revolutionary period and thereafter. This William Whiteside died on the homestead June 1, 1750, leaving a wife, Janet, and three sons, Thomas, Abraham and Hugh, and a daughter, Mary. Of these children, Thomas and Abraham became very prominent. Abraham was made a Justice of the Peace, and history shows that he was a leading man in that section, prospered financially, and became a large land owner. He died April 20, 1797, leaving sons, John and Thomas, and daughters, Hannah, Martha, Mary and Isabel. One of the daughters married Samuel Nieper, and he is the ancestor of the well-known Nieper family of Fulton township, whose home was on the farm that William H. Kennedy now owns. Another married Aaron Black, and from her are descended the family of Blacks, whose members still live upon the old homestead. Abraham's son, Thomas Whiteside, became a physician and practiced medicine, first in Lower Oxford township and afterwards returned to the homestead, whence he practiced medicine until his death. He was the first regular practicing physician in lower Lancaster county. He was a soldier in the Revolution, under Captain David Hayes, of Chester county, and Colonel Uriah Evans. Some analysts get him confused with Captain Thomas P. Whiteside, who is the leading subject of this sketch, but he was a nephew of Captain Whiteside. The other son of William Whiteside, sometimes the name appearing as Thomas P. Whiteside, with whom we are more particularly concerned, became very prominent in the Revolution, and from him have descended the most prominent men and women of the family. After his father's death in 1750, he seems to have left the homestead to his brother, Abram, and to have located, about in 1757, in Colerain township, where he became the owner of a large tract, immediately west of Kirkwood, which remained in the Whiteside name for many years, and included what are now the farms of G. W. Collins, Esq., George A. Hogg and Mrs. W. M. Schaum. The deed is dated January 2, 1778, Recorder's book R-485. It contained 452 acres. Afterwards, in 1788, besides purchasing several other tracts, he patented a large tract of 389 acres under the name of "White Plains." (Patent book 16, page 233). This included land to the west and south of his first holdings, now or later occupied by L. R. Patterson, Cromwell Blackwell estate and others. He likewise later acquired the John Barkley tract, or a portion of it, in which the Union village is located, and considerable farmland surrounding this village. Some time in his later life he established a distillery on the small spring stream which runs between the lands of G. W. Collins and the George A. Hogg farm. This distillery did an extensive business in its days, the whisky being hauled to Lancaster. Afterwards his son, John, the Congressman, was a part owner thereof, if not the sole owner. Prior to the Revolution he was on the Committee of Safety, and was an officer in the militia of his township. In 1774 he was commissioned one of the justices of the county for Colerain, Bart and adjoining townships, and was one of the lay Justices of the Court of Common Pleas of the county, in which capacity he served for many years. In 1776 he was commissioned a Captain in the Revolutionary Army, under Colonel Thomas Porter, and in August 13, 1776, he went to the front with his company and joined the army in the State of New Jersey. The records show that on that date advance payments were made to him of 112 pounds and 10 shillings on account of equipment of his command. From the reading of the muster roll, it would appear that his company was enlisted mainly from Colerain and immediate adjacent townships, and the following is the roster: William Patterson, James Ramsey, Samuel Cooper, Thomas Patterson, John Acheson, Thomas Reed, David McCombs, John McGeehan, John Brooks, James McElwain, Samuel Rhea, Samuel Mooney, Frederick McFerson, John Cooper, James Common, Thomas McDowell, Abraham Whiteside, a brother; Samuel Criswell, Samuel White, Joseph Warnock, Oliver Caldwell, Miller McDowell, John Pennell, James Reed, James Watson, James McGraw, John Miller, Samuel McKinney, Andrew Ritchey, Edward Dugan, James Stewart, John Plunkett, James Black, John Tannehill, Nathan Tannehill, James Marshall, Robert Moore, James Campbell, John Mitchell, John Neiper, Thomas McLaughlin, Owen Murphy, John Grimes and Joseph McCrery.

He was in the battles of Princeton, Trenton and Monmouth, and lost an arm in the service, but at what battle I could not ascertain. He died in Colerain township about November 1, 1805, and left a will, which was dated March 12, 1804, recorded in Will Book J, Volume 1, page 363, leaving Alexander Morrison and James Patterson as his executors. He left surviving him a widow, Jean, and a large family, as follows: John, who afterwards became the Congressman; James, Abraham, Thomas and William. His daughters were Mary, Rebecca, Martha, Violet and Elizabeth. All of them married and formed alliances with what were then or afterwards became among the leading families of that section. John, the Congressman, married Mary Filton, of Little Britain township. James married Elizabeth Dickey, who was a cousin of Rev. Ebenezer Dickey, who at that time was pastor of the Oxford Presbyterian Church. Abraham married Isabella Ross, who was twice a cousin of Robert Fulton and likewise a cousin of the Dickeys. Thomas moved to South Carolina, married there, and his descendants are prominent in the neighborhood of Charleston. William left this section unmarried. The daughters, from whom have sprung prominent descendants, married as follows: Mary married Robert Elder, a cousin of Rev. John Elder, and moved to Westmoreland county with him, where he became very prominent and his descendants still are thereabouts.

The other three sisters, by rather remarkable coincidence, married three brothers, as follows: Rebecca married Hugh McConnell, Martha married David McConnell, Violet married Samuel McConnell, all grandsons of Alexander McConnell, who settled in Drumore township, where Chestnut Level is now situated, and sons of Samuel McConnell, of Colerain township. Elizabeth married Benjamin Dickey, brother of Elizabeth Dickey.

From this union of daughters with the McConnell family have descended Judge A. D. McConnell, Judge of the Courts of Westmoreland county; Judge James Marshall, of Iowa, and Judge J. P. Smith, of Tennessee; also Rev. S. D. McConnell, D.D., rector of St. Trinity's Church, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Rev. David McConnell Steele, rector of St. Luke's Church and Church of Epiphany, N. Y.; Joseph Russell, chief counsel of the Michigan Central Railway Company, of Michigan; Jackson E. Reynolds, professor of corporation law, Columbia University, and general attorney of the Central Railroad of New Jersey; Abraham McConnell, still residing in Colerain township, and their children are direct lineal descendants, as are likewise the children of Samuel McConnell, who is now deceased. Of the sons, I have time only to take up the life and family of John Whiteside, the oldest, who became Congressman. He came to Lancaster some time prior to 1800, although he seemed to retain some interests in Colerain township thereafter, especially in the distillery, which his father had established there. Before proceeding to this, I will say concerning the other two sons, James and Abraham, that they remained upon the farms in Colerain township and raised families who lived there for a generation or more. Most of their descendants bearing the name of Whiteside, however, have left that section, some of them living in Philadelphia, some in Oxford, Chester county, and there is none of the name in the township now. The present Whitesides, who own extensive farms in that township, are descended from James and Samuel Whiteside, who are an entirely different family, and in no way related to the Captain Whiteside family. As I have stated, John Whiteside came to Lancaster and began business, first apparently as a hotel keeper, and herein I will find it necessary to refer briefly to some of the early hotels, which were in Lancaster early in the 1800's, although I will make no pretense to give exact data, only so far as John Whiteside was connected with them. The story, briefly, is this: In 1799 one John Hatz appears to have kept a tavern, the "Pennsylvania State Arms," situated opposite the well-known "Michael's Hotel," on North Queen street. Shortly thereafter, or in 1801, John Whiteside succeeded him and kept the house until 1803, when he was succeeded by Gustavus Stoy. John Whiteside then opened a new hotel, called "The Lion," a short distance north of the Court house in Centre Square, which he kept till 1811, at which time he opened a tavern on West King street, near the then market house, now the Central Market. He was apparently proprietor of this tavern, and at the same time a Justice of the Peace, when he was elected to Congress in 1815. I was not able to clearly establish the fact exactly when he took charge of the "Fountain Inn" Hotel. This hotel was in operation at least as early as 1796, and was then owned by a man by the name of Edwards. John Whiteside bought it eventually, but did not take a deed to it till 1822, which was after his two terms in Congress. However, the fact that the "Fountain Inn" was at that time, and it was some time prior thereto, one of the leading hotels of the city, and was the headquarters for the Democratic party, for quite awhile, in this county, and apparently a gathering place for the political leaders of the party when in the city, did seem to indicate that he may have been proprietor of the hotel for some time before he bought it. It is well to remember that inn-keepers in that day, according to the custom of both this country and the old, were usually very important men, and often were the political leaders of their section. The temperance sentiment that prevails at the present day was comparatively unknown at that time, and the liquor business in all its forms was quite as respectable and often as important as any other business of the town or community. At any rate, it is evident that he continued to be both landlord and Congressman, at the same time, and continued as owner of the hotel at the time of his death.

John Whiteside's first essay into political service seems to have been when he was elected to the Legislature in 1810, and re-elected again in 1811. He was first elected to Congress in the year 1815, served for two terms, and again in 1817, serving till 1819. He was elected to the office of Register of Wills in this county in 1821, served for four years, when he was again elected to the Legislature in 1825, and served for one year. His period in Congress covered the Administration of James Madison. So far as the records show, he did not take any particularly active part, other than voting. Considerable important legislation seems to have come before the Congress during that period. It was the period immediately following the readjustment of affairs after the War of 1812, and examination of the record shows that the principal questions of national importance that were considered and more or less of action taken upon them were the Fugitive Slave Laws, which were then discussed quite extensively, and the care of the Revolutionary soldiers, who were in want. There seemed to be no general pension legislation then as now. The navigation laws attracted quite a good deal of attention and the international relationship with reference to them. Likewise the banking and currency laws were largely under discussion, as was the proposition for a uniform bankrupt law throughout the United States. The neutrality laws, as affecting and governing this country in its relations to the various nations of Europe, who were at war with one another, seemed to call forth considerable discussion. Among other matters of wide importance then was the administration of the Mississippi Territory, as it was then called, and the establishment of territorial government for the same. Through both terms there was a wide discussion upon the question of compensation, so-called, to the members of Congress, who, apparently up to that time, had not been allowed compensation for their services. Six dollars per day was the compensation suggested. We also note that the Congressman's son, William, was appointed Register of Wills of Lancaster county in 1830, and served for six years.

The deeds of record in this county show that the deed for the hotel property was to John Whiteside from assignees and trustees of Henry Reigart, Esq., dated April 1, 1822, and recorded in Deed Book 24, page 216. After his death the property continued to be held by his children for a number of years, and was not disposed of until April 23, 1849, by a deed recorded in Deed Book O., volume 7, page 138. This deed was executed by his children and devisees under his will, which I will hereafter note. The signers to the deed are William Whiteside, Elizabeth Whiteside, John Whiteside, then resident of Cincinnati, and Lucy Whiteside, to William Wright, of Lancaster, Pa. It may be noted here that some of the interests had been bought out and transferred to some of the grantors above named. Congressman Whiteside died in 1829, left a will dated August 13, 1828, proven and recorded August 7, 1830, in Will Book P, volume 1, page 514, witnessed by Emanuel Reigart and Henry Carpenter. This document is rather an interesting paper, as indicating some of the characteristics of the man, and, if we are to judge from his library, he was a man of quite an intellectual turn of mind, as well as a student of religion and morality, if he was a reader of the books which it contained. He left the greater part of his library, indicating it by name, to his son, William Whiteside, who was at that time a member of the Lancaster Bar, having been admitted in 1826. Among the books especially bequeathed we note the following: Thomas' History of Modern Greece, in five volumes; Smith's Lectures in two volumes; Ramsey's History of the American Revolution, in two volumes; twelve volumes of the English Encyclopedia; Biographies of the Signers of the Declaration of Independence, in nine volumes; Josephus' History of the Jews, in two volumes; Brown's Dictionary of the Bible; Brown's History of Missions, in two volumes; Davis' Sermons, in five volumes; Thompson's Story of the Bible, in five volumes; Blair's Sermons, in five volumes; the Temple of Truth, and Christian's Companion and Confession of Faith, in two volumes. He left all school books and his books of Greek language to his grandson, John. All of his law books, State papers and Gazetteer he left to his son, the lawyer, William Whiteside. All of his silverware he gave to his three daughters. He is buried in the Lancaster cemetery, at a point due east from the main gate, and almost due southwest from the Keller mausoleum, and his burying place is rather unique in several respects. The iron fence surrounding it is perfectly circular in form, the only one in the cemetery of that shape. A single shaft, some 18 feet high, square in form, tapering, is erected in the centre thereof, but the inscriptions thereon are singularly lacking in any information as to the lives, age or time of death of anyone. The stone was erected by Haldy, but at whose directions or cost and at what time there is nothing to indicate. The inscriptions, four in number, one on each side of the square shaft, are as follows: On the south side, "Father and Mother, John and Mary Whiteside;" on the east, "Sisters, Susan Whiteside and Eliza Whiteside;" on the north, "Sisters Margaret and Mary H. Whiteside;" to the west, "Brother, William Whiteside, died June 28, 1867, the 69th year of his age."

According to the will of William Whiteside, the lawyer, dated September 2, 1865, recorded in Book Z, volume 1 and page 80, of which A. W. Russel and Luther Richards were witnesses, we find the following enumerated as among the grandchildren of John Whiteside, the Congressman, namely, John Whiteside, George A. Whiteside, and T. Elton Whiteside, Elizabeth W. Lee, Mary E. Singer, Margaret P. Whiteside, Philip S. P. Whiteside, of Philadelphia; Margaret M. Stees. Mrs. Bertha R. Whitney, of New York State, is a great-granddaughter of Captain Whiteside, being a granddaughter of his daughter, Martha, who married David McConnell. Mrs. E'la Nagle, of Elkin Park, Pa., is another great-granddaughter of the Congressman, she being the granddaughter of James Whiteside. Dr. J. P. McCaskey is distantly connected with the family. James H. Whiteside, now residing in Christiana, Lancaster county, is likewise a lineal descendant, still bearing the name. William Whiteside, the lawyer, was well known to a number of our older people, as he did not die until 1865. He seems to have had a fair practice, and was a man of affairs in his day, being a member of the School Board. His office was on West King street, at about where the Royer confectionery store stood.

William McCaskey, of Lancaster, was for a number of years a dentist in this city. He was also in the late Civil War, being a Captain in the army. The family of John Whiteside, a grandson, lived principally in the neighborhood of Parkesburg, Coatesville and Christiana, and it is an incident worth noting that one of the great-granddaughters was the wife of Edgar Rice, of Coatesville, the policeman, who was shot by Zach. Walker, the colored man, who was afterwards hanged by a mob.

The will of William Whiteside, the lawyer, son of the Congressman, throws some sidelights upon his life and family. He left the following bequests: $200 to the Presbyterian Church, $500 to the Children's Home, and $100 to the Lancaster Cemetery, for which he provided that the said cemetery shall be kept up and in good repair, the iron fence surrounding the lot, as also the monument therein, which he had erected, as he states, to his parents, sisters and self. There occurs in the will what might be termed an Irish bull, for therein he says that he is buried in said lot, but evidently he was not buried when he wrote his will. Judge Livingston was the executor of the will, and he directs his real estate to be sold, including the house in which he lived.

Thus, I close this sketch of the Whiteside family as one of the leading families of the English and Scotch-Irish portion of our population in the upbuilding of our great country in shaping its course, particularly in governmental affairs, in defending it in time of war, and in the lustre which they have placed upon its history, as the birthplace and home of men alike illustrious in literature, in mechanics, in engineering feats and in war, as well as in the council chamber, to whom fell the duties of framing the laws under which we live.

The story of this family probably would be repeated in importance, if not exactly in kind, of many other notable families of the southern end, and it may seem invidious that I have selected this one alone. As I stated in the beginning, it was purely accidental that I became acquainted with and first gained knowledge of their great activities and of the notable men whom it produced, and was surprised that so little had been written or seemed to be known concerning a family which had produced a Congressman from this district.

I trust I may find time, or that some chronicler may take the interest, to write up the story of other families whose life history would be equally interesting, and perhaps show that their part in the history of the county has been almost, if not altogether, as important.

Minutes of the October Meeting

Lancaster, Oct. 3, 1913.

The county historians held an interesting meeting on Friday evening, when two more papers of great historical value were contributed. One, submitted by Col. Samuel Wright, was particularly timely, as it concerned the early history of Columbia, which will shortly hold elaborate "Old Home Week" festivities.

President Steinman was in the chair, and there was a splendid attendance of members.

Miss Bausman, the librarian, reported that the society had been very fortunate since the last meeting in the number of donations received. They included many valuable books, newspapers and other publications, and the society feels grateful to the generous donors.

From Mr. B. F. Owen, the noted historian, of Berks county, the society received the Justice Docket of Edward Smith, of Earl township, in two volumes, the first from May 16, 1818, and the second from May 26, 1823. From Mr. Noah L. Getz, of East Hempfield township, were received a large number of newspapers published in Lancaster between the years 1813 and 1866. They are valuable additions to what the society already has of the early newspapers. He also contributed seven books printed in Lancaster between the years 1828 and 1880, including a German edition of the well-known book, "The Long-Lost Friend," sometimes referred to as the "Spook Book." Beside these there were a number of pamphlets printed in Lancaster, of historic interest in various directions. Mr. Christian Habecker, of East Hempfield township, through N. L. Getz, contributed a large number of newspapers published in Lancaster between the years 1871 and 1892, including copies of papers out of print and somewhat rare.

Other donations were as follows:

Magazines and Pamphlets—Volume 1, in seven parts, of the Publications of the Historical Society of Grand Rapids, from Mr. S. H. Ranck, Grand Rapids, Mich.; The Pennsylvania Magazine; American Catholic Historical Society Records; Lebanon County Historical Society Papers, Volume VI., No. 3; Classified Catalogue of Carnegie Library, Pittsburgh; History of the Wyoming Historical and Geological Society, Wilkes-Barre, Pa., 1858-1913, from Christopher Wren, Plymouth, Pa.; Recollections of Lancaster Fifty Years Ago by Luther Richards; Bulletin of the New York Public Library; Bulletin of the Grand Rapids Public Library; number of engravings from Abraham J. Sprenger, of this city.

Mr. F. R. Diffenderffer called attention to a special gift from Judge Charles I. Landis, copies of a recent publication from his pen, containing short sketches of the President Judges of the Lancaster County Courts, whose portraits Judge Landis recently presented to the Lancaster Bar Association, the paintings having been hung in the Court House. A copy of the pamphlet has been provided for each member of the society, and on Mr. Diffenderffer's motion a special vote of thanks was extended Judge Landis. Thanks were also extended to all the other donors.

The following were proposed for membership: Prof. Herbert H. Beck, of Franklin and Marshall College; Mary Belle Detwiler, of Mount Joy; Benjamin F. Hoffman, of Bainbridge; Mrs. D. H. Graham, 513 West James street, this city; Miss Jane M. Powers, 441 West James street, this city, and Adam Oberlin, of Canton, Ohio. These propositions will be acted upon at the next meeting.

John C. Carter, this city; Rev. Frank G. Bossert, of Mount Joy; G. S. Danner, of Manheim, and E. J. Harple, of Tampa, Fla., whose names were proposed at the September meeting, were duly elected Friday evening.

Miss Bausman, the librarian, was given authority to have prepared and printed copies of the duplicate volumes in possession of the society. Copies of these lists will be sent to the various historical societies in the State in accordance with the action of the State Federation.

The first paper of the evening was submitted by Samuel Wright, the Columbia historian, and it was read by Miss Martha B. Clark. Mr. Wright had as his subject, "Hempfield: the Beginning of Columbia," and as Mr. Wright is a grandson of Samuel Wright, who laid out the town of Columbia, the facts he gave can be relied upon as being authentic of the early history of the river borough.

D. F. Magee, Esq., read a paper on "The Whitesides of Colerain, the Revolutionary Captain and the Congressman," a family of Scotch-Irish that took a very active part in the early history of the country. It was while searching for a picture of Congressman Whiteside, who served this county two terms in Congress, that the writer came upon the interesting facts about the Whitesides, which he narrated at considerable length.

Both papers brought out some interesting discussions, and the thanks of the society were extended to the authors.

DONEGAL CHURCH; COLIN McFARQUHAR, A LAND- MARK OF PRESBYTE- RIAN HISTORY.

"Two hundred years of prayer and praise
Of winter months and summer days;
Yet love divine from age to age
Hath kept our precious heritage."

It is interesting to note that in Pennsylvania there are still standing fifty-eight provincial churches, and Donegal is the eighth on the list which have had a continuous existence from the date of organization to the present time.

The first settlement of Scotch-Irish, or Ulster Scots, occupied the post of danger on the Northwest, within the boundaries of Lancaster county, then Chester, about 1715, and was along Chickies Creek, in the vicinity of Donegal Spring. These pioneers named their settlements after the places of their birth. Donegal was a great maritime country of Ireland, for which reason a great number of our early immigrants sailed from this port.

Of the several Scotch-Irish settlements in America in the latter part of the seventeenth and the beginning of the eighteenth centuries, the one in Donegal township, Lancaster county, Pa., was the most notable. It became the nursery of Presbyterianism in Middle, Western and Southwestern Pennsylvania, Virginia and North Carolina.

Its Organization.

Donegal Church was organized in 1719, or very early in 1720. Some writers claim the date is 1714. Andrew Galbraith, Esq., son of James Galbraith, who came to America with William Penn, from Queenstown, on his second visit, and whose remains are buried at Derry graveyard, settled upon the land adjoining Donegal Church on the South, in 1718, for which he received a patent from the Penns in 1736 for 212 acres. He was the first ruling elder of this church, and to him belongs the credit of organizing the congregation, and the selection of one of the most admirable and attractive sites for a church edifice within the broad limits of the State.

The first meeting-house was erected with logs, and stood a few yards south of the present structure. After it had been used for a dozen years the present edifice was erected. Loose stones were collected from the surface of the ground in the surrounding woods, with which the walls were built. There was no effort made by the masons to dress the stone; they were simply laid in mortar to a line. The edges were craggy and rough. And there were no stone in the building that one man could not conveniently handle. The walls were plastered on the inside, but the outside was left in its rough state until the remodeling of the house in 1850.

Description of Edifice.

The front of the building was the south side, facing the graveyard, with a double doorway, the only entrance into the house. The door frame and windows had a circular head. The pulpit stood against the northern side and immediately opposite the doorway. A broad aisle led from the door to another one running lengthwise of the building in front of the pulpit. Upon each side of the pulpit and facing it were nine pews. Upon each side of the aisle running from the entrance door were seven pews.

There was also a small aisle near each end of the room, which ran at right angles to the main aisle, from which entrance was had to corresponding seven pews already mentioned. These pews faced the pulpit. There were four pews facing this small aisle and between it and the end walls. For some years after the church was built the floors of the aisles were composed of earth. No stoves were admitted. An innovation of that kind was considered incompatible with the worship of a true Christian. Gradually, however, two large stoves, cast at Cornwall, were introduced, and the aisles paved with brick. The seats and backs of the pews were made of yellow pine and oak. The backs came to the neck of an ordinary person, and were perpendicular. At the corners of the pews were corner boards rounded out to fit the backs, and which really made it more uncomfortable to sit.

Two or three rows of pews in front of the pulpit had inclined shelves, upon which the hymn books were placed. Of course, there was no paint upon any of the woodwork. Thus the building stood until 1772, when it was remodeled.

Some Early Preachers.

Rev. David Evans supplied the Donegal Church in 1720, and Rev. Geo. Gillespie and Rev. Robert Cross were among the supplies in 1721, probably for the year 1722 also. In the fall of 1723, Rev. Messrs. Alexander, Hutcheson and Daniel McGill were sent by New Castle Presbytery. In 1725 Rev. Adam Boyd, of Octoraro, gave Donegal the one-sixth of his time. On the 24th day of September, 1726, Rev. James Anderson was called to the pastorate of the church, and on the last Wednesday in August, 1727, he was installed. He died July 16, 1740. Rev. Hamilton Bell had charge of the church from 1742 until the fall of 1743. The pulpit was supplied by Presbytery until November 23, 1748, when Rev. Joseph Tate was installed as pastor, in which relation he continued until his death, October 11, 1774, a period of twenty-six years.*

The Presbytery of Donegal

The Presbytery of Donegal was organized October 11, 1732, and was fifth in line of succession in the United States, following the organization of the Presbyteries of Philadelphia, Snow Hill, New Castle and Long Island. Following is the Westminster Confession of Faith and Catechism, which was signed by the members of the church:

"I, having seriously read and perused the Westminster Confession and Catechism, do declare in the sight of God and all here present, that I do believe, and am fully persuaded, that so far as I can discern and understand said Confession and Catechism, they are in all things agreeable to the Word of God, taking them in the plain and obvious sense and meaning of the words, and accordingly I do acknowledge them as the Confession of my faith, and do promise through divine assistance forever to adhere thereunto. I also believe the Directory for the Exercise of Worship, Discipline and Government, commonly connected to said Confession, to be agreeable to the word of God, and do promise to conform thereunto in my practice, as far as in emergent circumstances, I can attain unto.

Second Tuesday of April, 1776, and ninth day of the month, the Presbytery met according to adjournment V. P. P. S., the Rev. Messrs. Slemons, Cooper, Lang, Balch, King, Vance, McFerven and Creaghead, with James Moor, William Porter, John McDorvel, Samuel Park, Wm. Rankin, and John Neilson, Elders. Absent, Rev. Messrs. Samuel Thompson, Hogg, Rhea, Hunt, Amos, Thompson, Black and Dougal.

The Presbytery was opened by Mr. Cooper with a sermon and Psalm 97-1. "Praise ye the Lord, for it is good to sing praises unto our God, for it is pleasant and praise is comely."

Mr. Vance was chosen Moderator and Mr. Balch as clerk for the current year.

Rev. Mr. McFarquhar produced ample Testimonials from the Presbytery of Gairlock, in Scotland, bearing date April 7, 1775, and a Certificate of Dismission from said Presbytery, bearing date May 25, 1775. In consequence of which, the Presbytery unanimously agree in cheerfully receiving him as a member of this judicative, and do accordingly receive him. Ordered that Mr. Lang take care of the above-mentioned papers, and that they may be produced to the Synod at their next meeting.

Ordered that supplications and all other papers directed to the Presbytery be brought on and read.

A call to Rev. Colin McFarquhar from the united congregations of Donegal and Mt. Joy was brought in by Messrs. James Anderson and Thomas Clingan, commissioners for said congregations. The commissioners represent that the congregations engage to pay Mr. Mc-

Farquhar annually the sum of one hundred pounds, to be secured to Mr. McFarquhar, by bonds or otherwise, to his satisfaction, and also they engage to allow to him the use of the glebe belonging to the said congregation of Donegal, under proper restrictions, or the sum of twenty pounds annually, if Mr. McFarquhar shall choose that rather than the use of said glebe.

They further allow that said annual salary commence on the First day of January last, provided that Mr. McFarquhar accept their call, the congregation allowing twenty pounds in lieu of the use of the glebe for the current year, and these stipulations they allow to be binding on them as long as Mr. McFarquhar shall continue the orderly minister of said congregation.

The Presbytery, having found that said call was orderly prepared and prosecuted, delivered the same to Mr. McFarquhar, who declared his acceptance of it.

Eleventh day, a. m.—The Presbytery met according to adjournment P. P. S. Q. S. Ordered to read the minutes of last Sederent. Messrs. Cooper, Lang and Creaghead are appointed to attend at Donegal to install Mr. McFarquhar on the first Tuesday after the adjournment of Synod, Mr. Lang to preach, Mr. Cooper to preside in that affair.

May 21, 1777—From the Presbytery of Donegal, Rev. Messrs. Robert Cooper, Colin McFarquhar and James Martin.

Messrs. Robert Smith, Spencer, McFarquhar, with James Thompson, elder, are appointed a committee of overtures to meet in this place to-morrow at 8 o'clock a. m., and by adjournment afterward as occasion may require.

May 23, 1777—A supplication from a society of Highland Scots of Southland was brought in by the committee of overtures and read, requesting that the Synod would supply them with books and appoint Mr. McFarquhar to preach and administer the Gospel ordinances amongst them.

This Synod, taking their request into consideration, do order a collection of books to be made throughout their Presbyteries for these people, and appoint Mr. McFarquhar to supply them some time, and administer the Gospel ordinances as he sees proper, and also to supply the adjacent vacant congregations in Northumberland four Sabbaths, and they order the Presbytery of Donegal to supply Mr. McFarquhar's pulpit in the meantime.

May 22, 1786.—The Presbytery of Donegal be divided into two Presbyteries—one to be known as the Presbytery of Baltimore, and the other by the name of the Presbytery of Carlisle, and to hold their first meeting agreeably to the adjournment of the late present Donegal.

May 22, 1786—That Rev. Colin McFarquhar, late of the Presbytery of Donegal, be annexed to the Presbytery of New Castle.

Arrival of Rev. McFarquhar at Donegal.

Early in the spring of 1776 Rev. Colin McFarquhar came to Donegal. His first home was at the public house of Samuel Scott, who lived at Big Chickies creek. Mr. Scott died in the spring of 1776, and left one hundred pounds to Donegal Church. Rev. McFarquhar was a witness to his will. He boarded with the widow for nine years. Before he came to Donegal, he was at Bedford for a few months. When his family came, he purchased several hundred acres of land from James Cunningham, between Mt. Joy and Sporting Hill. An agreement was made between them, but when the land came to be surveyed it seems there were many more acres within the described limits in the agreement than there were supposed to be, and Mr. Cunningham refused to execute the deed. Mr. McFarquhar took the case to the Supreme Court, which compelled Mr. Cunningham to make a deed.

A charter was granted to Rev. Colin McFarquhar, John Baillie, Jas. Baillie, James Anderson, Robert Spear, Brice Clark, Samuel Woods, James Muirhead and Joseph Little as trustees, and their successors, on September 11, 1786. They found it necessary to have a charter in order to sell part of their land, which they did immediately on receipt of the official paper.

The congregation of Mr. McFarquhar was composed of some of the wealthiest landholders in the State, but they were not prompt in paying his salary, and quite a large amount of back pay was allowed to accumulate. The congregation agreed to sell all the glebe lands of 212 acres, reserving but thirty or forty acres—the amount of money for the sale to James Moorehead at $45 for an acre to be paid to Mr. McFarquhar.

His Prayers Too Long.

Morning and afternoon services were often held in the church, and it was not an uncommon occurrence for Mr. McFarquhar to pray for one hour and fifteen minutes. On a certain occasion, and when seated upon a log to partake of a lunch with Col. Lowrey, that bluff old man said to him: "Nicodemus, you must make your prayers a little shorter."

Mr. McFarquhar helped to organize the Presbyterian Church in Columbia and a supply in 1805. They worshipped in private houses and sometimes in the warehouses along the river. He also preached in York, Chanceford and in the churches of the Cumberland Valley, by order of the Presbytery.

In the history of Franklin and Marshall College, by Rev. Dr. Dubbs, Colin McFarquhar, minister in 1807, was named, with others, on a committee "who will from time to time visit the Franklin Academy and examine the progress of the pupils."

Became a Patriot.

One Sunday morning, while the congregation was at worship, an express rider came to Donegal Church and announced that Howe's army had left New York with the intention of invading Pennsylvania. Rev. Mr. McFarquhar had persisted in praying for the King, until this Sunday morning, after service, the officers of the church called him out, and, under the famous tree, offered him the alternative of casting his fortune with them or quitting his charge. He promised fealty to the Revolutionary cause, and from that time on was loyal to the Colonies and a true patriotic and Christian character he displayed in always keeping to the letter of his vows of fidelity. As Burke says: "Our Liberty becomes a noble freedom."

A Graduate of Edinburgh.

Mr. McFarquhar came from Gairloch, Dumbarton county, Scotland. Gairloch is a lake, a branch of the Firth of Clyde. It is seven miles long, with a village of the same name at its head and a summer resort with cottages along its banks—not hotels. Vessels were sent there to adjust compasses after they were built, until the invention of Lord Kelvin made it unnecessary.

Mr. McFarquhar was a fine scholar, a graduate of Edinburgh University. During his thirty years' pastorate he conducted a classical school and prepared young men for college. The presidents of Washington and Princeton Colleges said that he was so thorough and rigid in his teaching, his scholars so well prepared in the classics, that they at once took high rank among the students.

He visited the families which extended more than ten miles from the church. He catechised old and young, and kept a complete roll of each family and members of the congregation. The list numbered 500.

Mr. Samuel Evans says: "I have seen his translations and marginal notes of Latin and Greek books used by him in teaching in Scotland, or while he was in college. From the names and references in one of these books showed he descended from a highly-educated ancestry, some of whom were evidently professors in Edinburgh College. He was a man of wonderful energy and powerful physique."

On November 15, 1786, the first meeting of the Board of Trustees, constituted by an Act of Assembly, was held at Donegal. It was convened by Rev. Colin McFarquhar, those present being Messrs. Robert Spear, John Baillie, Jas. Muirhead, Samuel Woods, Brice Clark and Joseph Little. Mr. James Anderson was absent. Mr. McFarquhar was elected president, Mr. Joseph Little, secretary, and Mr. Samuel Woods, treasurer. The trustees appointed the following persons to collect the minister's salary, due before January, 1787: Mr. Robert Spear, Mr. John Baillie, Thomas Baillie, Jr., Mr. Brice Clark, Mr. Samuel Wood, Mr. James Moorehead and Mr. Joseph Little.

On November 25, 1788, Mr. McFarquhar produced an account against the congregation from April, 1784, to April, 1788, amounting to twenty pounds, for keeping the books, as their clerk. In a receipt dated May 7, 1806, he says: "My pastoral labors in the church at Donegal terminate at the above date, and therefore the above is a receipt in full for all my pastoral services in said church."

In the Donegal churchyard is a grave marked thus:

Mrs. Elizabeth McFarquhar, wife of
Rev. Colin McFarquhar Minister of the Gospel at Donegal, who departed this life on the 6th day of August, A. D. 1805, and in the 64th year of her age.

The death of Mrs. McFarquhar was a great sorrow to him. He was at that time seventy-five years of age, and he decided to give up his charge and live with his daughter, Mrs. Wilson, in Lancaster, where he remained several years, when he removed to Hagerstown in 1814, to live with his daughter, Mrs. D. Cook, where he lived until God took him. He was buried in the Presbyterian Church there with the following epitaph:

Here lies the remains of
Rev. Colin McFarquhar,
A native of Scotland,
30 years Pastor of Presbyterian Church of Donegal, Lancaster Co., Pa., who died 27th August, 1822, full of years, having reached the age of 93.
Also, his daughter, Mrs. Mary Cooke, who died,
August 22, 1820, aged 64 years.
Also, David Cook, Esq., her husband, who died June 12th, 1821.
Also, their Daughter, Mrs. Eliza C. Boggs, who died December 4, 1817.

His Remains Reinterred at Donegal.

During the present year the remains of Mr. McFarquhar, his wife and children were removed from Hagerstown and reinterred at Donegal. On that occasion Mrs. M. N. Robinson wrote the following poem:

In the blessed peace of God
Rests 'neath this hallowed sod,
Near the church where he of old
Gathered men into the fold.
And, as pledge of Love Divine,
Reverent gave the Bread and Wine.
Where he sought to point the Way
To the realms of endless day.
Now, within those old walls' shade
Here his mortal form is laid.
Guard it well, oh, sacred sod!

A Poem by Sallie Hastings.

Mrs. Sallie Hastings, daughter of Robert Anderson, of Leacock township, and whose widow later married Brice Clark, published a book of poems in 1808. Dickson, of Lancaster, was the printer. She was an attendant of Donegal Church during the ministry of Mr. McFarquhar. On January 4, 1806, she dedicated the following poem to

THE REV. C. McF—R.
Stranger, behold yon venerable man, Whose rev'rend form majestically moves,
With native grace, along the velvet
plain,
Before the little flock he dearly loves.

He, from the famous isle of Scotland fair, Embarked, early, for our peaceful shore,
 And left the tender partner of his care,
 With three sweet babes, his absence to deplore.

Columbia's fertile regions to explore
 Was his design; then homeward to repair,
 And bring those darling treasures
 with him o'er,
 And come and preach a free salvation here.

'Twas now the arduous conflict first began
 Between Columbia and Britannia's isle; Affrighted peace forsook the bleeding land,
 And armed hosts contended for the soil.

No more the cheerful song of lab'ring
 swains
 Thro' sylvan groves re-echo'd, from afar;
 But groans of dying anguish fill'd the plains,
 And all the mingled sounds of wasting war.

Now blood and slaughter marked their crimson way,
 And martial fleets invested ev'ry shore;
 Confusion rag'd, and thund'ring o'er the sea,
 Bellona dy'd the waves with crimson gore.

Fair peace, at length, her olive-branch
 display'd,
 And o'er Columbia's coast bade freedom reign;
 The war-worn hero sheath'd his reek-
 ing blade,
 And tranquil happiness return'd again.

For ten long years no wife or child saw he,
 Far separated by the foaming flood;
 At length his pray'r was heard; they o'er the sea
 Were safely wafted, by a faithful God.

Full thirty years, from yonder sacred dome,
 Did he proclaim Salvation's joyful
 sound;

To train immortals for a life to come,
 A teacher from his God, he yet is found.

Threescore and ten revolving summers shed

Their silver dews, to deck his locks with gray;

Their hoary influence upon his head
 Has ripened age to full maturity.

Smoothly he glides down life's tempestuous sea, Enjoying health, and happiness, and ease,

And finds his strength proportioned to his day,
And ends, belov'd, his spotless life in peace.

Where are the crowds which once did throng those pews?
Go ask yon marble tombs; they will reveal
That they, in mournful state, do now enclose
The faded forms which once those walls did fill.

Yet still their pastor lives; while, one by one,
Survivors own the awful Monarch's sway;
He still proclaims salvation's joyful
sound,
Directs their flight to heav'n, and leads the way.

Father of light and life, Thou God above,
O, may Thy Spirit aid his feeble breath;
O may Thy arms of everlasting love Support, defend him, in the hour of death

And, when consigned to the peaceful tomb,
May guardian angels watch his crumb'ling dust,
Till the last trumpet calls the faithful home;
Then wake to joys immortal, with the just.

Mrs. Hastings wrote to her mother, at Donegal, Mrs. Brice Clark, from Cross Creek, Washington county, Pa., where she moved with her sister and family as follows:

"Cross Creek, Aug. 13, 1804.

"Dear Mother:

".....I go very little abroad, only to meeting. There I attend as regularly as the church doors are open. I will not say it is merely religion takes me there, believe indeed it is more for the pleasure I take in hearing the eloquent pastor speak than the sound divine—but be that as it may, it is for the pleasure of hearing Mr. Marquis alone. To hear him is harmony, though he often gives us the truth of the law in all its severity. He has before now fairly made me jump off my seat with terror and slapping the pulpit. If he would only quit that he would be the sweetest man in the world, but the people here would not like him if he would preach in moderation. He is the dreadfulest thunder I ever heard. Nothing seems more at variance than his preaching and his countenance—one is all terror, talking all sweetness and mild persuasion. Scold as he may, I will serve him. Nay, I cannot help it. He was formed to be served—it is only giving him his dues. But you Donegal people would not hear him at all if he would take a fit of sending you to the D—, and that he would do without any ceremony for things you would scarce think you merited, such rough treatment.

“Oh, how he would handle your dancing and singing, your dressing, and gay conversations, your giddy round of visits, your taste and refinements, your preparations for company and all the folly of your fashions. I just wish to hear him at you, yet he would do it so nicely and with such a grace that you would love him nevertheless.”

Rev. Thomas Marquis was born at Opequon, near Winchester, Va., and was the most eminent pulpit orator of his day. The tones of his voice were exceedingly musical, hence he was often called “The Silver-tongued Marquis.” He was pastor of the church at Cross Creek, Washington county, for thirty-two years, from 1794 to 1826.

In a paper read before the Iris Club of Lancaster, Pa., by Hon. W. U. Hensel, the title “A Literary Grass Widow,” in which he reviews Mrs. Hastings’ literary productions, he says of her: “A star that flickered feebly in the constellation of local poesy and then was lost to the literary view—a flower that blushed not altogether unseen, but whose fragrance was wasted on an unsympathetic air." Do you think so?

The Death of Rev. McFarquhar.

In searching the files of the Lancaster Journal since writing the sketch I found the following:

"Departed this life on the 28th of August at the residence of his son-in-law, Mr. David Cook, Hagerstown, Md., in the ninety-first year of his age, Colin McFarquhar, minister of the Gospel. The deceased was born in the Highlands of Scotland in 1782, and had the charge there of two congregations for thirteen or fourteen years. He emigrated to this country in the year 1775, accepted a call to Donegal congregation, Lancaster county, Pa., and continued their minister for upwards of thirty years. During forty-eight years since he came to this country he has never been known to be sick more than three days and retained his senses to the last."

On the ship with Rev. McFarquhar in the passage to America in 1774 came Donald Cameron and his son, John, Simon Cameron and his wife, with her sister, Ann McKenzie, who were the ancestors of Hon. Simon Cameron and his son, J. Donald Cameron, who are so closely identified with the history of our county and State, not forgetting they, too, have national fame.

As a tribute to these emigrants from Bonny Scotland and their descendants and their prominence in the religious and political life of our nation, I quote the following: "A Scot will always help a Scot. Centuries of struggle and hardship have taught the Scottish people to be in all changes of fortune and down to the gates of death loyal and loving one another." To use the beautiful phrase of Robert Louis Stevenson: "No amount of world-wandering can make them forget their national traditions. Even if their little homeland were to be rolled out flat, it would be smaller than Indiana; yet to Scottish eyes there is no land like it."

A BIT OF ASTROLOGY.

It may be surprising to such persons as have given very little attention to the subject to find that considerable superstition still exists among even the enlightened people of Eastern Pennsylvania. Signs of the moon are observed not only in the planting of fence-posts, but also in the art of horticulture, for who does not remember that we must not plant certain kinds of vegetables under unfavorable signs, lest they run to seed or do some other undesirable thing? Every now and then we come upon a relic of this kind, which shows to how great an extent signs controlled the activities of the people referred to in very recent times, if they do not even at the present time.

Thus, the intimate connection between astrology and the practice of medicine is strikingly shown in a table entitled "A Useful Flebotomy Table," handed to the writer a few days ago. Judging by the character of the letters and the German language in which it is printed, this table is most likely about a hundred years old; but it by no means follows that its instructions are no longer observed. Bloodletting was freely practiced in the early part of the last century, and many persons believe that it hastened the death of Gen. Washington in the last year of the previous century.

Astrology is such a study and knowledge of the sun, moon and stars, especially of their places in the sky with relation to each other on particular days, as is supposed to enable the possessor of this knowledge to guide himself in his daily affairs. It is assumed that every one is born under the influence of some star, whose relative position indicates the success or failure of a proposed undertaking; hence arose the custom of consulting an astrologer before undertaking any important business. (Caesar, Wallenstein and Napoleon were great believers in their stars.) In order to do this most conveniently the "useful Flebotomy Table" referred to above was prepared, "in which may be seen the days of the entire month on which it is well to perform the operation of flebotomy (commonly called bloodletting)."

"In the first place one must carefully observe the time of the new moon. If this takes place in the forenoon, one must begin to count with that day, but if new moon takes place in the afternoon, the counting must begin with the following day, and it is not necessary to make any further observations of the signs, be they good or bad; but, nota bene, when the bloodletting is necessary no particular day should be awaited."

2 day is bad—Gets a fever.

3 day is bad—Gives great soreness.

4 day is bad—Inclines to dying.

5 day is bad—Blood disappears.

6 day is good—Bleeding helps the blood and promotes micturition. . .

7 day is bad—Loss of desire to eat and drink.

8 day is bad—Gives diseases of the stomach.

9 day is bad—Itching of the body.

10 day is bad—Gives watery eyes.

11 day is good—Creates desire to eat and drink.

12 day is good—Entire body becomes refreshed.

- 13 day is bad—Neither eating nor drinking is beneficial.
14 day is bad—Soreness appears.
15 day is good—Strengthens eating and drinking.
16 day is bad—The most dangerous day in the year.
17 day is good—The best day in the year.
18 day is good—Promotes health.
19 day is bad.
20 day is bad—Does not escape grave illness.
21 day is good—Good for everything.
22 day is good—Free of all diseases.
23 day is good—Wards off disease and strengthens the members.
24 day is good—Takes away all bad humors.
25 day is good—Serves also for prudence and wisdom.
26 day is good—Will be spared weakness of the stomach and fever through the entire year.
27 day is very bad—Dangerous also to diseased eyes.
28 day is good—Promotes good health.
29 day is bad.
30 day is bad.”

As the interval from new moon to new moon is only twenty-nine days, the maker of this table was evidently so innocent of astronomical science as to believe that lunations sometimes are thirty days in length.

In this connection attention may be called to an illustration in the back part of Baer's Almanac—a woodcut of a nude man with lines drawn from different parts of the body to figures and symbols representing the twelve signs of the zodiac named after particular groups of stars, called constellations, regarded as belonging to the several signs. The heading reads: “Anatomy of Man's Body as Said to be Governed by the Twelve Constellations." This government is distributed as follows:

Head and Face....Aries (Ram).
 NeckTaurus (Bull).
 ArmsGemini (Twins).
 BreastCancer (Crab).
 HeartLeo (Lion).
 BowelsVirgo (Virgin).
 ReinsLibra (Scales).
 SecretsScorpio (Scorpion).
 ThighsSagittarius (Archer).
 KneesCapricorn (Goat).
 Legs..Aquarius (Water-bearer).
 FeetPisces (Fishes).

This belief in the power of the gods represented by signs over the different parts of the body can be traced in its westward course all the way from Chaldea to our own country, and from before the days of Abraham to the twentieth century, as witnessed by Baer's, and, indeed, most almanacs. The place of the sun and especially of the moon, that is, its proximity to some particular star or constellation of stars, was carefully observed and physicians and surgeons regulated their practice—their treatment of patients—accordingly.

The other paper was read by Dr. R. K. Bucherle, and it was on the subject of popular superstitions which are still in vogue in many places and among many people.

The Life and Work of General John A. Sutter. - - - - 279

THE LIFE AND WORK OF GEN. JOHN A. SUTTER.

As a citizen of the town in which the subject of this sketch spent the last years of his life, and in which lie his remains and those of his wife, I have been prompted, as a testimony of my regard for his memory, to contribute this sketch of his life to the records of our Society. The subject matter of this sketch represents facts, data and material gathered and compiled from various sources. My task was, therefore, one of sifting material available, rather than producing something heretofore unpublished. Fiske, McMaster, Lossing and others have exhaustively chronicled the colonial history of our country. They have clearly enumerated and discussed the deeds of those who discovered the various sections of the thirteen colonies originally settled. But when we come to the period of emigration from the East to the middle and extreme West, beyond a brief account of the journey of Lewis and Clarke and a few other pioneers, historical records fail or are of the most meagre sort. It remains, therefore, for the historical societies and kindred organizations in the States exploited by these pioneers to preserve the annals pertaining to their exploits. Such has been the fate of General John Augustus Sutter. But for the fact of the discovery of gold upon his lands, his name would hardly have graced the pages of a general history of the United States. Forunately, therefore, for this fact, the memory of General Sutter and of his pioneer adventures cannot be omitted from the pages of any complete American history.

The name Sutter was originally spelled Sooter. The Sutter family had moved from the canton of Berne to the Grand Duchy of Baden in the year 1800. Here, in the city of Kandern, at midnight February 28, John Augustus Sutter was born. He received his common school education in the city of Kandern, but, being of Swiss parentage, he went to the city of Berne, Switzerland, to become proficient in military training. He was graduated from the military college at Berne in 1823. Shortly after his graduation he was married to Miss Anna Dübelt, who was also a native of Switzerland. Sutter, a future adventurer of the New World, entered upon a similar life in the Old. In 1823 he became an officer in the "Swiss Guard" of the French army, serving under Charles X. He saw service in the Spanish campaign of 1823-24 and in the vain resistance at Grenoble by Charles X., to the three-days' revolution of July, 1830. After the overthrow of the Bourbon monarchy, he returned to Switzerland and served in that army. He was noted for his bravery, generous, frank, and confiding nature, and faithful and conscientious discharge of his duties. He left the Swiss army at the age of thirty years. Though one writer states that this ambitious young officer emigrated to the New World because of his desire to retrieve a dissipated fortune, I would rather have you believe that it was the intrepid military spirit, the traditional Swiss love of freedom in the breast of young Sutter, the glowing reports of the opportunities for a greater life to be found in the rising young Republic of the West, which were the impelling forces of Sutter's determination to emigrate to America.

Thus we find this daring young Swiss Captain, filled with the desire of founding a Swiss colony in America, landing on the free American shores at New York in July, 1834. From New York he went with an expedition to St. Charles, Mo., but, the vessel containing his belongings having been sunk in the Mississippi river, he remained for a short time at Westport, and here declared his intention of becoming a citizen of the United States. He went to New Mexico, but in 1836 returned to Missouri. The following year, however, he returned to New Mexico and settled at Santa Fe. While there he learned much of Upper California from the trappers who occasionally wandered into Santa Fe. Accordingly, in March, 1838, he joined a party of American trappers and went with them to their rendezvous in the Rocky Mountains. From here, Sutter, with six horsemen, crossed the ridge, made their way, via Forts Hill, Baisi and Walla Walla, to Oregon, descended the Columbia river, and, after many hardships, succeeded in reaching Fort Vancouver. And now, following his course briefly, we find him taking passage to the Sandwich Islands, embarking from thence, after a delay of five or six months, for Sitka, Alaska, disposing of his cargo here, sailing down the coast of Western United States and compelled by storms to put in at San Francisco Bay. His ship anchored opposite Yerba Buena, now San Francisco, July 2, 1839. Here a new difficulty arose. The Mexican officials boarded his vessel and ordered him to Monterey, a port ninety miles farther south, the only port of entry on the west coast of California at that time. Bent upon securing lands, Sutter at once called upon Governor Alvarado, and requested lands on the Sacramento river for colonization. He was granted a passport, the promise of citizenship, and such lands as he wanted if he returned within a year. Failure to secure capable guides, hostile and treacherous Indians did not deter this determined leader with his party of ten white men and eight Kanakas from the Sandwich islands in their efforts to reach the mouth of the Sacramento river. They succeeded, and continued to a point ten miles below the site of the present capital of California. After having annihilated and subsequently pacified a body of two hundred Indians, they were guided to the mouth of the Feather river. Fearing attacks from hostile Indians, the Sutter party returned to the mouth of the American river, where, August 16, 1839, on the south fork of the river, at a point now within the limits of the city of Sacramento, Sutter's effects were landed. Three weeks later he moved to the spot upon which he subsequently erected "Sutter's Fort." Only his original fourteen companions made up his colony. No one can dispute the fact that the General displayed extraordinary judgment and remarkable foresight in the selection of the spot for the establishment of his colony. Thus, I have briefly sketched the wanderings of General Sutter. Here, then, we find this courtier, carefully trained soldier, polished and benevolent gentleman, entering upon a new field of endeavor, and planting his little colony.

The chief source of annoyance to the colony were the Indians, who were continually making attacks upon them. Upon one occasion, a party of eight white men surprised a party of several hundred Indians and put them to rout. This defeat of the Indians gave Sutter possession of the entire Sacramento and part of the San Joaquin Valley. Many of these Indians afterwards became civilized and served as artisans and soldiers. Though I have not been able to authenticate this story, it is related that on one occasion General Sutter was asleep, and was about to be attacked by a hostile Indian, when a large mastiff, Brave, the property of Sutter, sprang upon the Indian assailant and saved his master's life.

In his journal General Sutter says: "It is a wonder we got no swamped a many time; all time with an Indian crew and a Kanaka at the helm." (He says this in reference to going to San Francisco in an open boat.) In June, 1841, Sutter visited Monterey and was made a Mexican citizen. He received a grant of eleven leagues of land from Alverado under the title of New Helvetia. He was also given a commission as Governor of the Northern frontier. During this same year Alexander Ratchaff, Governor of the Russian possessions known as "Ross and Bodega," settlements near the entrance of San Francisco Bay, called on him and offered to sell these colonies. With the instincts of a shrewd business man, the Swiss soldier negotiated the purchase for $30,000, to be paid in installments covering a period of four years. His purchase included several thousand head of live stock, a schooner of 180 tons, small arms, and several pieces of ordnance, among which were pieces used by Bonaparte during his retreat from Moscow, and presented by the Czar to the Russian American Company. In 1844, finding his original grant of eleven leagues too small for his constantly growing herds, he petitioned Manuel Michelto-rena for a grant or purchase of the sobrante or surplus over the first eleven leagues of land within the bounds of the Alvarado grant. The Governor acceded to the request of Sutter in February, 1845, partly on account of Sutter's services in putting down the rebellion. During the war, Sutter continued in the service of Mexico. However, his attitude toward the emigrants who applied to him was cordial and kind. There are innumerable instances of where he lent emigrants horses, cattle and provision and shelter whenever they happened to come to his fort. The "History of the Donner Party," a book written by C. F. McGlashan, Esq., of California, is replete with instances of Gen. Sutter's generosity. The American flag was raised over Sutter's fort July 11, 1846. The fort was for a while used as a garrison for the United States, Sutter having been placed in command. The erection of the fort, which was a quadrangular adobe structure capable of admitting a thousand men, was begun in 1841 and completed in 1844. In 1846, Gen. Castro, on behalf of the Mexican Government, offered the General $100,000 for his holdings, but he promptly refused.

In 1848 Sutter had attained the zenith of his prosperity. He had fulfilled the terms of his grant, his cherished dream had been realized. It was, indeed, New Helvetia. In addition to his fort he owned all the land in sight. He had thirteen thousand head of horses, cattle, sheep and hogs. Little did he dream of the evil days before him. Ere long he would open Pandora's box. General Sutter's creative genius is clearly shown by the extensive improvements he made upon his estate. He cut a mill race, three miles long, at a cost of $25,000; erected a mill, primitive though it was, having no bolting machine, the middlings, bran and flour being separated by a sieve. He also erected a sawmill at a cost of $10,000. In addition to these he had a winery, distillery and tannery. General Stockton had appointed the soldier Governor of the district, and Kearney had appointed him Indian agent. Space will not permit me to speak further concerning the life at the fort; suffice it to say that with all the wealth he possessed at this time, he was contented to live a simple, generous, hospitable, unostentatious life, among the Americans, Irish, Germans and civilized Indians, who were members of his household. He was as a patriarch to his people, advising and re-proving, and punishing whenever necessary. He was Judge, jury, counsel and prosecutor in all formal trials. Adam, one of his Indians, lazy and shiftless fellows that they were, was on one occasion tried under such circumstances, and, after a lengthy discourse upon the seriousness of the offense, he was sentenced to receive thirty lashes with the lariat.

Discovery of Gold.

The discovery of gold upon his lands was at once his making as well as his unmaking. I shall briefly recount this incident: Marshall, a soldier of fortune, had gone as an emigrant from New Jersey to California in 1844. He was engaged in farming until the opening of the Mexican War, when he enlisted under Fremont. Upon his return from the army he found his cattle and horses strayed and stolen. Therefore, he appealed to Sutter for work. He was thirty-eight years old, unmarried, eccentric, stubborn, vindictive, though faithful. He was an ingenious mechanic, hence was employed by Sutter. He had been sent to select a site for the saw-mill, and found a favorable spot on the south fork of the American river, forty miles east of the fort, at a point called Cullooma, now Coloma. Here the water was excellent and the pine trees plentiful. The mill was completed in January, 1848. On the night of February 2, 1848, Marshall, his horse in a foam and all bespattered with mud, asked to see Sutter alone. Satisfied that they were alone, he drew from his pocket a pouch containing yellow grains of metal. He told Sutter that the natives and whites had picked up the shining particles. The nitric acid test proved that it was real gold. Marshall went back to the mill that same night and desired Sutter to accompany him, but, on account of the rain, he waited until the following day. When within ten miles of the mill Sutter saw something come out of the bushes and thought it was a bear, but he found that it was Marshall. Asked what he was doing, he said he become impatient at the long wait. Sutter and Marshall having satisfied themselves that there was more gold to be found, begged the laborers to keep it a secret until the crops were harvested. The story goes, however, that a Mormon wrested the secret from a teamster while partly under the influence of liquor. Another story is that the daughter of Marshall gave out the secret. This is not true, as Marshall was never married. It is also reported that the Mormons took out gold on Mormon Island in January, 1848. There is no truth in this story. Permit me to deviate from my story to speak of the career of Marshall. Bad management, trouble with the Indians and squatters, were the means of divesting Marshall from his personal and part of his real estate. He tried to secure employment, but failed. In 1857 he planted a vineyard, but the venture was also a failure. In a letter written at the age of fifty-four he says: "I see no reason why the Government should give to others and not to me. In God's name, can the circumstance of my being the first to find the gold region of California be a curse to deprive me of every right pertaining to a citizen under the flag? Little did my great grandsire think that one of his descendants would have such feelings when he set his name to the Articles of Independence (the farmer from New Jersey.) Hargreaves, from my advice, returned to Australia, went into the mountains and discovered gold, and was rewarded by being made wealthy by his Government. I, who discovered gold in California, have been robbed of my all. How different have been our fortunes! He can bless the nation under whose flag he was born. Should I curse mine?"

In another letter to General Bidwell he expresses the hope that he may be of assistance to General Sutter, and speaks with bitterness about the loss by fire of his home and the papers necessary to the winning of his suit. Marshall afterward continued to live on his farm near Coloma, became a member of the agricultural society, and in later years became a spiritualist. In 1872 he was voted a pension of $200 a month for two years. This was kept up until March, 1876. Then an act was passed providing for a pension of $100 per month for two years. He drew no pension the last seven years of his life. He died alone in his cabin in his seventy-fourth year. A $5,000 monument has since been erected on the summit of Marshall Hill, in Coloma, at an altitude of 3,000

It would be an old story to tell you about the conditions following the announcement of the discovery of gold—nobody willing to work, unharvested crops, squatted land, stolen and slaughtered cattle, and, above all, no law to adjust claims. During the rush of 1849-1850, a party of five men killed and sold $60,000 worth of Sutter's cattle and got away without apprehension. By the first of January, 1852, the so-called settlers, under the pretense of pre-emption, appropriated all of Sutter's horses, cattle and hogs to their own use and occupied his lands.

In such a predicament, it was but natural for the General to seek relief in the Courts of the United States. His efforts in this direction cover a period of about eight years. I could not expect you to listen to the arguments in these cases, though I have here in my possession syllabi of them for your examination. I have also a map making clear the contention of the litigants. You will no doubt recall that shortly after the discovery of gold there was appointed a United States Court of Land Commissioners to pass upon all claims for land in the new country. You will also recall that I spoke of two separate grants to Sutter, one of eleven leagues, known as New Helvetia, granted to him by Alvarado, the then Governor of California, and the other called the Sobrante (surplus) of twenty-two leagues. The Land Commissioners found these awards, or grants, perfect, and, therefore, confirmed Sutter's title to them. The squatter interests, however, appealed to the United States District Court for the Northern district of California. This case was reported in Volume 27, Federal Cases, page 1,368, case No. 16,424, J. Hoffman presiding. District Court of the Northern District of California. June 10, 1861. This Court confirmed the decree of the Land Commissioners. The squatters, however, appealed the case, and the U. S. Supreme Court (Report in 2 Wallace, 69, U. S. 562) reversed the lower Court.

Following is a resume of the claims of Sutter:

The Supreme Court confirmed the grant for eleven leagues, but disapproved the action of the District Court and Board of Land Commissioners in reference to the second grant upon grounds purely technical. Though the grant of twenty-two leagues was one of the last acts of Micheltorena as Governor, and though it was made while the country was in a state of rebellion, the grant was expressly made in consideration of the valuable and military services of the said Sutter. In other words, the land was actually bought and paid for by the services rendered by Sutter to the Mexican Government. The Land Board had confirmed the claim under the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo. This provided that Mexicans now established in territories previously belonging to Mexico, and who remain for the future within the limits of the United States, as defined by the present treaty, shall be free to continue where they now reside or to return at any time to the Mexican Republic, retaining the property which they possess in the said territories, or disposing thereof and moving the proceeds wherever they please without their being subjected to any contribution, tax or charge whatever. The Supreme Court acknowledged that the grant was a genuine and meritorious one, and then decided in favor of the squatter interests on purely technical grounds. The technical points referred to the exactness of the survey and meaning of certain words used in connection with the case.

Thus Sutter's ruin was accomplished. The following is an account of his indebtedness:

Expenses in money and services which formed the original consideration of the grant	$ 50,000
Surveys and taxes on the same	50,000
Cost of litigation extending through ten years, including fees to eminent counsel, witness fees, traveling expenses, etc	125,000
Amount paid out to make good the covenants of deeds upon the grant, over and above what was received from sales	100,000
Total	<hr/> $325,000

In addition, Sutter had given titles to much of the Sobrante grants, under deeds of general warranty, which after the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in favor of the squatter interest Sutter was obliged to make good out of the new Helvetia grant, so that the confirmation of his title to this grant was of little advantage to him. Thus Sutter lost all his landed estate.

He endeavored to save the Hock Farm, a valuable estate on the Feather river. He had hoped to have this as a place to spend the last years of his life with his wife and children, whom he had brought from Switzerland in 1852, having been separated from them for eighteen years. This, however, he also lost in his financial failure, and, to add to his misery, his house was totally destroyed by fire in 1865, and with it valuable records of his pioneer life.

In this forlorn state the man, who is easily the equal, in point of colonial enterprise, with Astor, made an appeal to the National Government. The State of California responded promptly, probably without a direct appeal, and for fourteen years, beginning in 1864, Sutter received $250 per month. This sum enabled him to push his claims before the National legislative bodies. He was a petitioner before these bodies, and certainly before Congress, practically continuously from 1871 to the time of his death in 1881. If he himself was not present in Washington, his claim was presented by sympathizing Congressmen. Briefly stated, he prayed to Congress that they guarantee to him so much of the unsold public lands as the Supreme Court had caused to be taken unjustly from him, or its equivalent in money, minus the expenses which may have been heretofore incurred in the causing of his twenty-two leagues to be surveyed, and in disposing of the same. This would have amounted to 97,651 acres, or $122,063 in money, minus the expenses above referred to.

The presence in Washington of Gen. Sutter led ultimately to his choice of Lititz as a place to spend the remaining years of his fast-waning life. Having learned of the excellent educational facilities offered by the Moravian Church at Bethlehem and Lititz, he sent his two granddaughters to Bethlehem. However, they were there but a short time, when they entered the Linden Hall Seminary, Lititz.

I presume Sutter must have held the medicinal value of Lititz Springs water in higher regard than some of us do, for we are told that he selected Lititz because of the peaceful life of the community, of the educational advantages offered by the Moravian Linden Hall Seminary for his granddaughters, and, moreover, the Lititz Springs were recommended as a panacea for rheumatism, with which he was a great sufferer. The life of our quaint and quiet little town must have appealed to this rough and rugged man of the frontier, and formed an appropriate contrast to the stirring scenes and sad misfortunes of his early years. His associations with our citizens, though limited, were of a generous, benevolent and hospitable nature. His indomitable and unrelenting spirit must have been softened.

He may not have been moved religiously; he was not, for, though he was a Lutheran in early life, in later years he was not identified with any church. In 1871 the General built a substantial brick house on Main street, Lititz. This house is now owned and occupied by Mr. Charles H. Kreider, and is used as a dwelling and hardware store. Here he entertained his friends. H. H. Tshudy, Esq., Major J. R. Bricker, Esq., and Dr. J. H. Shenk, all of whom have since died, were some of his most intimate associates. As we have said, he was troubled with rheumatism, and always walked with a cane. He walked regularly, but never a great distance. He was regular in his habits, always rising at 4 o'clock and retiring at 8. He read magazines, papers and books assiduously, and could speak five languages fluently—English, German, French, Spanish and Italian. As a certain writer says, he was the most interesting conversationalist Lititz ever had. I can give you no better idea of the man's disposition than to quote a telegram sent by him to Francis D. Clarke, Esq., on the occasion of the annual banquet of the Pioneer Society of which he was a member, January 20, 1879:

"To my associates assembled at the Steertevant House, New York: Sick in heart and body, in vain appealing to Congress to do me justice and to return only part of what was wrongly taken from me, and with little hope of success this session, unless you my friends by your influence will aid my cause, I could not feel cheerful as your guest at the table to-night, and I did not want to mar your pleasure by my presence. Remember old times without me."

A New York Herald representative, December 7, 1874, writes this about him: "I yesterday met Captain Sutter in the California wine store on Broadway, opposite Ball & Blake's; a hale, hearty old gentleman, with a venerable air and appearance.....He is said to be a generous, unsuspecting, jovial gentleman, and to have lost his fortune through generosity." Robert Livingston Jenkins, a citizen of Lebanon, Pa., also spoke to me of the General's good qualities. Mr. Jenkins knew him in California and also afterward at Lititz. On the day of the funeral of Gen. Sutter, Gen. J. C. Fremont described the death of the General in these words: "I will tell you of his death. It was on the evening of the day Congress adjourned that this good, but hitherto almost broken hearted, pioneer of pioneers was sitting in his room at the St. Charles Hotel, Washington, D. C. He had just heard that for the sixteenth time his request had been denied him. (The claim had been passed by the House and was in the Senate on its final passage when an overzealous Senator spoke so long upon the resolution that a motion to adjourn was ordered and carried. The bill was not reached again that session). His heart was almost broken. He took up his writing to inform his wife at Lititz, when his strength failed, and he retired. The next day, June 19, 1880, a friend had called to console him and was returning when he met Senator Voorhees, who said, 'Well, how is the General to-day?' 'He is down,' was the reply. 'You ought to go and see him.' 'Well,' said Senator Voorhees, 'I cannot go to-day, but on Saturday morning you come with me and we will go together and see him.' On Friday at 2 p. m. Senator Voorhees was informed that General Sutter was dead. It was the Senator's intention to inform the General that at the opening of the next Congress he would again press his claim, but it was too late."

After short services over the body on Saturday afternoon, conducted by Rev. Byron Sutherland, D.D., it was borne by some of his old California comrades to the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Station and brought home under the escort of the late Haydn Tshudy, Esq., also an intimate friend of the deceased. The final funeral rites were held on the following Thursday afternoon. A delegation of the Pioneer Society of New York, of which Sutter was president, attended in a body, among the number being Generals Fremont and Gibson, the former of whom delivered a eulogy. In his sermon Rev. Charles Nagel referred beautifully to Sutter's settlement in Lititz in 1871, his retired life, his grand characteristics, his patience and suffering during the fifteen years of struggle to have Congress indemnify him for his losses; how he was compelled to return home from time to time disappointed; when he would again and again hide himself, as it were, from public gaze. Let me also quote from the sermon: "His grand passion was work. The education and improvement of the people and country of the far West were his aim. His settled purpose seemed to be to live for others; his ambition was to fill the place of the American citizens to the advantage of the whole country. General Sutter was a great man, and there were many traits in his character worth imitating. The country has lost a faithful citizen, Lititz an excellent townsman." In this connection permit me also to quote General Sherman: "To him (Sutter) more than to any single person are we indebted for the conquest of California, with all its treasures."

The men who acted as pall-bearers were citizens of Lititz, viz: Samuel E. Grosh, Isaac Bomberger, Dr. P. J. Roebuck, Samuel Foltz, Adam B. Reidenbach and George Ochs, the three last-named being still alive. "The great pioneer of the days of old, the days of gold, the days of '49 in California," had finally found a resting-place among those whose customs he had learned to love, in the "Quaint Little God's Acre" south of the church. The Sutter vault is located apart from the other graves upon a rising plot of ground, to the right of the entrance. The vault consists of a marble slab which rests upon a granite base, and the whole is inclosed by a granite coping. Upon the slab is this simple inscription:

GENERAL JOHN A. SUTTER,
Born, Feb. 28, 1803,
At Kandern, Baden, Died, June 18th, 1880,
At Washington, D. C.
Requiescat in Pacem.

ANNA SUTTER (nee Dubelt).
Born Sept. 15, 1805.
Died January 19th, 1881,
At Lititz.

Above this inscription is the Sutter coat of arms, an eagle and a shield. Though his life was filled with bitterness and strife, his last resting place is in appropriate contrast. Surrounding and sheltering this simple slab are rows of pines and maples, whose friendly branches ever whisper sweetly peace and rest to the forms that lie below.

After the death of her husband Mrs. Sutter lived a life of seclusion, submitting to public gaze only when necessary. She survived her husband only about seven months. Her death occurred January 19, 1881, and she was buried in the same vault with her husband.

General Sutter had three children, two sons and a daughter. John, Jr., was married twice, both of his wives having been Mexicans, the latter having been of noble birth, and therefore probably of Spanish origin. He was for some years Consul at Acapulco in Mexico, and died at this place. One of his sons, John, Jr., now resides at Flatbush, L. I. His two daughters, Carmen and Annie, were married to a Mr. Smith and Mr. Harry Hull, respectively. Annie, the General's only daughter, married Dr. Victor Link, and lived for a time at Acapulco, and some time in the States, but, I think, has since returned to Acapulco. Emile, the other son, was never married. He frequently labored under hallucinations, and seemed to be somewhat unbalanced. He had gone to Europe to dispose of some mines, and, while staying in a hotel at Ostend, Belgium, on the morning of July 4, 1881, was found lying dead on the bed. A half-empty bottle of laudanum was lying on the table, and his pocketbook had been rifled of its contents. For this theft his servant was punished. Though indications pointed to suicide, the physician who made the autopsy stated that the cause of death was an aneurism.

On August 3, 1909, the Moravian Cemetery Association of Lititz received a letter from J. R. Knowland, member of Congress from California, and Grand President of the Native Sons of the Golden West, stating that their order had, at a cost of $100,000, restored "Sutter's Fort" in the city of Sacramento, and inquiring how permission could be obtained for the removal of the General's body to California. The association received a second letter on May 10, 1910, from the same gentleman. This time he asked the congregation what action had been taken, and stated that the Order of Native Sons is anxious to place these remains within Sutter's Fort, and that the Fort is now the property of the State of California and kept up by it. The Secretary of the congregation, at the instance of that body, replied that they would first have to secure the consent of the descendants, and, in that event, to remove also the remains of Mrs. Sutter. The descendants, however, would not consent to such action. They are satisfied that, in view of the bitter circumstances under which their distinguished progenitor had left California, they would much prefer his remains to rest in the peaceful town where he enjoyed his last days.

What, then, shall we say of this man? I have already referred to his generosity, hospitality, kindness, patience, justice, fidelity, bravery, and also his sociable disposition. Let me give you an illustration of his humility: On August 20, 1853, Captain A. Andrews, of Company A, Second Ohio Regiment, in an appropriate and elaborate letter of praise for the services which Sutter rendered to California. formally presented him with a sword as a token of his esteem. The following is the General's reply:

"I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your highly-esteemed favor of this date, accompanied by a sword. I claim no credit whatever for any services I may have rendered in the early days of California. As one of its pioneers, I could not do less than use my best exertion to promote its prosperity, and contribute to the comfort and enjoyment of those who followed me to its lovely valleys. To do so was pleasure, and that alone prompted me in everything that I did. If in promoting my own pleasure I have been so fortunate as to secure the esteem of my fellow-citizens, I am doubly paid. For the expression of your personal consideration and the sword which you present as a token of that consideration. You will please accept my thanks, and you may rest assured that I shall ever cherish a lively remembrance of your kindness. With, dear sir, the assurance of my personal esteem, I am

'Most respectfully,

"Your obedient servant,

"J. A. S."

All the authorities who estimate his character are definite in their unstinted praise of him, with one exception, Mr. D. C. Swasey, who is at present preparing a history of Sutter's life. He says Sutter was an intriguer, who used every means to forward his own interests at the expense of others. He accuses him of having been a deserter from the Government he swore allegiance to. in the hour of distress. He charges him with having been an adventurer who quarreled with every associate; a merchant who never paid a debt he could avoid; and a schemer whose energy was but a phase of reckless enthusiasm and whose executive ability did not extend beyond subjecting Indians. The final charge is one of having plotted against the United States while secretly showing friendship for its people. I presume the author has proof to substantiate these charges and assertions. The records that I have consulted, meager though they may have been, revealed nothing which could have justified me in speaking in any but the highest of terms of General John Augustus Sutter. I express the hope, also, that our society and the citizens of Lititz, or either, by means of a tablet or marker, will perpetuate the memory of this distinguished compatriot, pioneer, countryman and citizen, who, in his lifetime, honored us with his association, and who, in his death, hallows the plot—"God's Acre"—in which he awaits "The Last Summons."

Minutes of December Meeting.

Lancaster, Pa., December 5.

The members of the Lancaster County Historical Society were in session this evening when they listened to a very entertaining paper, read by Prof. Jacob B. Landis, of Franklin and Marshall Academy, on "The Life and Work of General John A. Sutter," on whose land in California gold was discovered in 1848 by one Marshall, who was employed by Sutter on his estate. Prof. Landis had made a thorough search for material for his excellent paper, which was most complete in giving a history of the early gold excitement on the Pacific Coast.

The Society took action which will make its library more valuable to historical students and others. On motion of Dr. R. K. Buehrle, a resolution was adopted giving the use of the books of the library to those persons who are engaged in research work. Frequently inquiries are made at the public library for books along historical lines which are not found in the collection of that library. These inquiries could readily be supplied by the Historical library, but the books there were never available except when the librarian, Miss Lottie M. Bausman, was there. Under the new arrangement, the librarian of the public library, Miss Myers, will have access to the books of the historical library, thus enlarging the scope of the public library, and increasing the usefulness of the Historical Society. The books of the latter will not, however, be allowed to be taken from the building except by members, but strangers will be allowed to consult them at will in the library building.

Bound Volumes—American Historical Association, annual report, Vol. I, 1911; Laws of Pennsylvania, 1913; Bureau of American Ethnology, Chipewa Music; Report of the Commissioner of Banking, 1912; Report of the Secretary of Internal Affairs, 1912, Pt. IV; Vetoes by the Governor, 1913; Message of the Governor, 1913; Report of the State Librarian, 1912; Report of the Superintendent of Public Printing, 1912.

Magazines and Pamphlets—Proceedings of the Eighth Annual Conference of Historical Societies; The James Sprunt Historical Publications, 2 numbers, from the University of North Carolina; Annual Report of The Western Reserve Historical Society, Cleveland; Lebanon County Historical Society, Vol. VI, No. 4; Linden Hall Echo; Classified Catalogue of the Carnegie Library of Pittsburgh, part V; International Conciliation; Bulletin of Carnegie Library, Pittsburgh; Bulletin of Grand Rapids Public Library.

A post card of the oldest known Landis Homestead, 1488, Hirzel, Switzerland, from D. B. Landis; History of Lancaster County, Pennsylvania, and Directory of the Principal Business Houses, 1869, from F. R. Diffenderffer; an original paper concerning the paving of King street, in the borough of Lancaster, 1802, from F. R. Diffenderffer; a number of the society's pamphlets, from Miss Rebecca Stamm; picture of General John A. Sutter, from the family of the late Captain John Bricker, Lititz; three

Hicks Almanacs, from George H. Rothermel.

A vote of thanks was extended the donors.

On motion the old officers were re-nominated for the ensuing year, the election to take place at the January meeting. The nominations were as follows: President, George Steinman; vice presidents, F. R. Diffenderffer and W. U. Hensel; corresponding secretary, Miss Martha B. Clark; recording secretary, Charles B. Hollinger; librarian, Miss Lottie M. Bausman; treasurer, A. K. Hostetter; executive committee, Mrs. Sarah B. Carpenter, Mrs. M. N. Robinson, D. F. Magee, Esq., H. Frank Eshleman, Esq., D. B. Landis, George F. K. Erisman, Dr. R. K. Buehrle, L. B. Herr, John L. Summy, Monroe B. Hirsh.

The following new members were elected: J. Newton Stauffer, Mrs. W. C. Sapp, Mrs. Walter C. Herr, W. Y. Haldy, A. A. Hubley, Harry B. Hostetter, Edward D. Ruth and C. H. Martin, of this city; Margaret Wade, of Washington, D. C., and Mrs. Estelle Bucher, of Mt. Joy.

The following were proposed for membership: D. H. Sensenig, of this city; Mrs. John Scott, of Philadelphia; Samuel S. Symons, Marietta; H. C. Symons, Millersville, and John G. Zook, Lititz.

AN ASTOR IN LANCASTER COUNTY.

Many years since a German family, consisting of a man by the name of Fessler, his wife, and two children, named Jacob and Susan, drifted into Bainbridge, where they located, but no one knew from whence they came. They located in a small stone house, which was standing a few years since, at the extreme Northern end of one of the village streets. The husband appeared to be without trade or occupation. The wife was a practical spinner, but did not seem to use her abilities; in fact, the family was shiftless. The son was simple-minded.

Between 1830 and 1840, it is claimed, while Mrs. Fessler, with a lighted candle, was hunting for her bottle of spirits hid among some tow in her low garret, the spinning material was suddenly ignited and she was burnt to death. She was buried in a small old-time burying ground about one-fourth of a mile north of Bainbridge. What became of her husband is not known. This Mrs. Fessler claimed she was a sister of John Jacob Astor, the New York millionaire.

There also resided in Bainbridge at the same time Yorick Sherer, who died shortly prior to 1878. He came from Baden, and claimed that he knew Mr. Astor in the old country, as well as the Fessler family, and, as he related later in life, after consulting my grandfather, Henry Haldeman (1787-1849), from his desire to assist the Fesslers in their poverty and also to renew his acquaintance with Mr. Astor, he made a trip to New York, traveling on foot. Upon arriving there he hunted up Mr. Astor, but that gentleman refused to recognize him or admit the sister's claimed relationship. Sherer, thoroughly angered and indignant at Mr. Astor's actions, as he stated, freely expressed his views to the latter on his treatment and then returned to Bainbridge, where he repeated his story. Shortly afterwards, however, a regular annuity was received by my grandfather from Mr. Astor to be paid to Mrs. Fessler, which was continued for some years.

After the death of Mrs. Fessler, Mr. Astor sent for the daughter, Susan, to come to New York to be educated. A Mr. Crider, a farmer near Bainbridge, took charge of her to Philadelphia, from where he sent her to New York. Rumor claims she soon tired of her new life and remained but a short time. What became of her was never learned here.

The son, Jacob, for years after his mother's death, wandered around the neighborhood. He lived one entire season under the roots of an overturned tree along the banks of the Susquehanna near my grandfather's residence at Locust Grove, and died there. He was buried midway between Locust Grove and the Haldeman lime kilns, a short distance below.

The late John Wiley, who owned and resided at Locust Grove in later years, was familiar with many of these circumstances. Having heard his father, John Wiley, relate the same, to whom Mr. Sherer had described his New York journey, desiring to confirm the details, wrote to my uncle, the late Prof. S. S. Haldeman (1812-1880), my grandfather's eldest child, and received the following reply:

"Chickies, Lan'r Co., Pa.,

"28 May, 1868

"John Wiley, Esq'r,

"Dear Sir:

"Upon returning from Philadelphia I find your letter of the 13th inst. Your impressions about the Fesslers are correct, although I do not recollect the fact you mention about the eagle. They had two children, Jacob and Susan. Mrs. Fessler was burnt to death. She was an Astor, or, as she pronounced it in Pennsylvania-German 'Ashtor.' She was proud of her dignity and would assert it by saying: 'Ich will dich wisse' lasse das ich ein Ashtor bin!' (I will let you know I am an Astor.)

"My father paid her annuity from Mr. Astor, her brother. The family was improvident and not up to the level of the ordinary German population.

"My mother's piano was made by Astor, of London, a brother of the New York Astor.

"Yours truly,

"S. S. HALDEMAN."

The eagle's nest referred to was on a tall tree near my grandfather's residence, and it is said the simple-minded son, Jacob, shot the eagle which had its nest there, making my grandfather very angry.

Prof. Haldeman was very careful in his statements and never put anything in writing unless positive of all the facts. I had the same information from my father, Cyrus S. Haldeman (1825-1892), who attended to my grandfather's business affairs and was his executor.

LANCASTER COUNTY IN THE VARIOUS WARS.

In all the wars of our country Lancaster county was always among the first to respond.

In 1744 a company was raised in the Conestoga Valley for defense against the French in the war of France and Spain with England.

Two companies were raised in Lancaster county, by the King's command, out of 400 men from the province of Pennsylvania, called in service on June 9, 1746, to be employed in concert with the regular forces in the immediate reduction of Canada, then belonging to France.

In 1747-8 there were two regiments in Lancaster county, comprising thirty-two companies, commanded by Colonels Thomas Cookson and Benjamin Chambers. They were militia, and called "Associated Regiments."

In the French and Indian War of 1754 Lancaster county responded promptly. I could not find the number of enlisted men, but as there were forty-seven commissioned officers, the proportion of enlisted men for the population of that period must have been more than fair.

In the War of the Revolution, so soon as the people of Lancaster county learned of the Boston trouble they at once commenced preparations and publicly expressed their feelings at a meeting held in Lancaster in June, 1774, at which representatives were present from nearly all the towns or townships in the county. This meant treason to the English crown. Two companies of "expert riflemen" were formed, and, without waiting for the other seven comprising the Pennsylvania battalion, they marched to the seat of war, arriving at Cambridge, Mass., early in July, 1775, where they rendered efficient service and were highly complimented. How many from Lancaster county joined the Continental army I have been unable to discover. I have seen the names of 577 in the regular forces, but there were many more who entered active service during the urgent calls of 1776, 1777 and 1778, taking part in the battles of Brandywine, Germantown, Long Island and Monmouth, and as members of the "Flying Camp," of which the muster rolls have never been published, also in the various campaigns in New York and New Jersey. Some authorities claim there were thirty companies of about 2,500 men.

In the war of 1812-15 with England, I find 830 names credited to Lancaster county, but there were probably some who joined the army elsewhere and were not credited to the county.

In the Mexican War of 1846-48, many entered the service from Lancaster county, of which I have not been able to see the muster rolls, but it is known that a considerable number joined various commands at Philadelphia, Harrisburg, and other points or rendezvous, and probably were so credited.

In the Civil War of 1861-5, Lancaster county responded when the news was received that Fort Sumpter had been fired upon. I find by my own actual count of the muster rolls of various organizations in the United States service the names of 11,925 credited to the county, and I know there were many more for which the county did not receive credit, who joined regiments at other and larger places. From my personal knowledge, I know this to be the fact with entire companies.

In the War with Spain, of 1898, Lancaster county responded promptly. Three companies, one from Lancaster and two from Columbia, served in Porto Rico with the Fourth Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteers, commanded by Colonel D. B. Case, of Marietta. In addition to this seventy from Lancaster county, of whom sixty-five were from Marietta, joined Company I, Eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, of Wrightsville, York county. About 400 entered the service from Lancaster county, all that the Government would accept.

Minutes of January Meeting.

Lancaster, Pa., Jan 2, 1914.

The annual meeting of the Lancaster County Historical Society was held this evening in the regular meeting place in the Smith free library building. In the absence of President Steinman, Mr. L. B. Herr filled the chair.

The librarian, Miss Lottie M. Bausman, presented her monthly report, as follows:

Bound Volumes Received:—Library of Congress Report, 1913; Annual Report of the Smithsonian Institution, 1912.

Magazines and Pamphlets — Proceedings of the American Philosophical Society; Records of the American Catholic Historical Society; Papers of the Lebanon County Historical Society; Battle of Hanover and article on Newspapers of York, from George R. Prowell; Classification Catalogue from Library of Congress; Safeguards of American Democracy, from the New York Historical Society; Reminiscences, by Manlove Hayes, from J. B. Long; Linden Hall Echo; International Conciliation; Bulletin of the New York Public Library; Bulletin of the Grand Rapids Public Library; Bulletin of the Carnegie Library, Pittsburgh.

Special donations were as follows: Maps of the "Life of Washington," containing, also, subscribers' names, 1807; Bridges' Atlas of Lancaster County (two copies); Atlas of Pennsylvania, 1872, from M. T. Garvin. Three books of the United States Fish Commission, which contain drawings of Mrs. Mary M. Hildebrant, and bequeathed to the Historical Society in her will.

Miss Bausman also presented her annual report, which will be found in full in this issue of the pamphlet.

The secretary, Mr. C. B. Hollinger, presented his annual report, which stated that there has been a gratifying increase in the membership, which is nearing the three hundred mark, and that the work of the society is attracting attention all over this country as well as in foreign climes. He predicted another successful year's work. The secretary's report will be found in full in this issue of the pamphlet.

The annual report of the treasurer, Mr. A. K. Hostetter, was presented and read. It showed the society's finances to be in good condition. On motion, a committee, composed of D. F. Magee, H. C. Slaymaker and Miss Martha B. Clark, was appointed to audit the treasurer's accounts.

The secretary was directed to draw orders for the annual appropriation to the librarian of $25 for the purchase of books and for the payment of the insurance premium of the society's belongings.

The following were elected to membership: D. H. Sensenig, of this city; Mrs. John Scott, of Philadelphia; Samuel S. Symons, of Marietta; H. C. Symons, of Millersville, and John G. Zook, of Lititz.

These names were proposed for membership: Mrs. A. M. Breneman, 213 North West End avenue, this city; Miss Helen E. Myers, of Mt. Joy; Harvey N. Hurst, 27 East Orange street, this city; Frank S. Everts, 102 South Ann street, this city.

The officers of the society who served during the year 1913, were, on motion, re-elected for the year 1914. The list will be found elsewhere in this issue.

Dr. J. B. Lincoln, of this city, who had been announced to read a paper on "Churchtown," was unable to be present, and instead two papers submitted by Horace L. Haldeman were read by the secretary. The subjects were "An Astor in Lancaster County" and "Lancaster County in the Various Wars."

They were referred to the executive committee for publication.

It was announced that the annual meeting of the State Federation of Historical Societies would be held at Harrisburg on Thursday, January 14.

There being no further business, the society adjourned.

In Memoriam.

Sketches of the members of the Society who passed away during the year 1913 were prepared by the Secretary. They are as follows:

CAPT. SAMUEL L. HARTMAN.

Capt. Samuel L. Hartman, one of the best known citizens of Lancaster, and an active member of the Lancaster County Historical Society, died January 23, 1913. Born in East Hempfield township, November 23, 1832, he entered the store of the late Christopher Hager, in this city. In 1855 he took a position as an express messenger on the Missouri river, and to inland points on the frontier. This occupation was accompanied with very great risks to personal safety, and required men of fearless courage. All of the express business was conducted by personal carriers, by boat, horse and wagon or horseback. Captain Hartman was often compelled to "rough it," in the sternest sense of that term. He figured in several thrilling hold-ups, but it was a matter of great satisfaction and no little pride for him to be able to declare that in his long service as a messenger not a single parcel of goods that was entrusted to his care was ever lost or stolen. Captain Hartman had a brilliant war record, his first enlistment having been with the First Kansas Brigade. Later, he assisted in the protection of the National Capital under Gen. James Love. After this service Captain Hartman enlisted in Company E, Seventy-ninth Pennsylvania, Captain Hambright being commissioned a Second Lieutenant. His gallantry won him promotions to First Lieutenant and later a Captaincy. He served on the staff of General Rousseau, the brilliant Kentuckian, who commanded the division under which the Seventy-ninth Pennsylvania, "Lancaster's Own," fought with such great bravery and terrible loss at Perryville. For quite a lengthy period, also, he was the personal aide of Gen. George H. Thomas in his campaign in Tennessee. Captain Hartman remained in the service until the fall of the Confederacy in 1865, when he was discharged with honors. He was a member of the First M. E. Church and took pride in the fact that he was a member of the American Peace Society, was greatly interested in forestry, and was a member of the American Forestry Association. He also was deeply concerned in the affairs of the local Y. M. C. A.

Captain Hartman remembered the Historical Society in his will, many valuable curios and documents having been left to this organization.

DR. E. O. LYTE.

Dr. Eliphalet Oram Lyte, for twenty-five years principal of the Millersville State Normal School, and known throughout the entire United States as one of its leading educators, entered into rest January 3, 1913, in this city, where he had been living since his retirement from the head of the Normal School. He was born June 29, 1842, in Bird-in-Hand, his early education being secured in the rural schools. He graduated from Millersville School in 1868, and immediately afterwards became a member of the faculty. In 1887 he assumed the principalship, succeeding Prof. B. F. Shaub, of this city. In 1878 Franklin and Marshall College invested Dr. Lyte with the degree of Master of Arts, and again, in 1887, with that of Doctor of Philosophy. Some distinguished honors came to Dr. Lyte. In 1891 he was President of the Pennsylvania Teachers' Association. In 1899 he had the high honor of election to the presidency of the National Educational Association, of which he was a life member and also for a number of years a director. He was also a member of the American Academy of Political Science. As even a greater honor in Dr. Lyte's judgment than his election to the presidency of the National Educational Association was his selection as Judge of the Educational Exhibit at the World's Fair at St. Louis, in which the choice was made from those who were regarded as the most eminent educators in this country and abroad. Dr. Lyte took a deep interest in Masonry, in which he held a thirty-third degree. He also was a member of the Loyal Legion, the Grand Army of the Republic, the Sons of the Revolution, and was a member of the Lancaster County Historical Society for many years. He served in the Civil War, with a brilliant record. Dr. Lyte was an author of wide reputation, and in this direction he leaves, as one of his principal memorials, a collection of text books that served, perhaps more than anything else, to enhance his reputation. His works on language, bookkeeping and music are widely known, and are employed in many schools. He had a marked gift for music and wrote both words and music for a number of popular songs, mostly of a patriotic nature.

MRS. MARY S. P. C. BAUMGARDNER.

Mrs. Mary S. P. C. Baumgardner, widow of Henry Baumgardner, an active member of the Lancaster County Historical Society, passed away February 6, 1913, on the eve of her eighty-eighth birthday anniversary. She was an active figure in the social life of the city, delighted in entertaining her wide circle of friends, a role for which her bright intellect and proclivities made her peculiarly adapted. She was one of the oldest members of the First Presbyterian Church. Her first husband was Jay Cadwell, one of Lancaster's foremost citizens in industrial and political circles. He built the Cadwell House which has just been torn down to make way for a modern hotel.

WALTER M. FRANKLIN, ESQ.

Walter M. Franklin, Esq., one of the best known residents of Lancaster, met a tragic death on Friday, June 27, 1913. He was on a business trip to Slatington, Pa., when he was thrown from a Philadelphia and Reading Railroad train and instantly killed. The deceased was born in this city April 28, 1851, being a son of the late Hon. Thomas Emlen Franklin, who was Attorney General of Pennsylvania in 1851. The late deceased was graduated from Franklin and Marshall College in 1872, studied law with his father, and was admitted to the Lancaster Bar June 18, 1875. For many years he was identified with various business enterprises in Lancaster city and county, and was one of the promoters of the city's first trolley roads. He served one term as District Attorney of the county and was for years President of the Lancaster, Oxford and Southern Railroad, and at the time of his death was President of the Steinman Hardware Company. He was a member of the Board of Trustees of Franklin and Marshall College, taking an active interest in everything pertaining to that institution and Franklin and Marshall Academy. He was a member of St. James' Episcopal Church. The deceased was solicitor, for a number of years, of the Farmers' Trust Company, and was President of the Lancaster and Ephrata Turnpike Company. He gave some attention to historical matters and was a member of the Lancaster County Historical Society.

JOHN D. SKILES.

John D. Skiles, the venerable banker, passed away suddenly on Saturday, October 18, 1913, at his home on North Duke street. He was one of Lancaster's foremost citizens, connected with many of its public institutions and, in his sixty years of business life, saw many material changes in his home city. He was born in Leacock township, April 29, 1829, and began his business career as a clerk in a rural store. His first experience in this city, where he was subsequently destined to become a leading factor in various walks of life, came in 1845, when he secured a position with Michael Peiper, a grocer. After five years in this establishment and two in the dry goods firm of FonDersmith & Herr, he embarked in the grocery business at East King and Duke, remaining there until 1858 when he removed to East King and Christian, continuing there until 1865. In that year he purchased a dry goods store, disposing of it in 1878. For many years he was engaged in the leaf tobacco business, under the firm name of Skiles & Frey. He was prominently identified with both the Fulton National Bank and the Lancaster Trust Company from their inception. Of the former he was a director from its start, and on September 6, 1897, he succeeded the late John R. Bitner as its President, retaining that office until his death. He was President of the Managers of the Lancaster Cemetery Company, was Treasurer for thirty-five years of the Mechanics' Building and Loan Association, was a Director of the Y. M. C. A., and a Trustee of Franklin and Marshall College, as well as the Reformed Theological Seminary. He was also conspicuous in the social life of the city, being one of the organizers and a Director of the Hamilton Club and a member of Lodge 43, F. and A. M.; the Lodge of Perfection and the Commandery. He was a member of St. Paul's Reformed Church and was also a member of the Lancaster County Historical Society. He served several terms as a member of City Councils, and also one term as Prothonotary. Mr. Skiles was a good citizen in every sense of the word. He delighted in doing for others and his charities were large, although unostentatious.

C. EDGAR TITZEL.

C. Edgar Titzel, General Manager of the Conestoga Traction Company, and one of the city's most prominent young business men, died Sunday, March 30, 1913, death being due to a cerebral hemorrhage. Christian Edgar Titzel was born at Irwin, Pa., on May 4, 1875. At that time his father, the late Rev. John M. Titzel, D.D., was pastor of the Reformed Church at Irwin. When the deceased was twelve years of age his father accepted a call from the First Church, this city, and the family moved to Lancaster. Three years later the lad took a position as an errand boy in the office of the old Edison Electric Illuminating Company. He thus chanced at an early age to become associated in a business which proved subsequently to be the line of endeavor for which he seemed peculiarly fitted and in which he rose to the highest positions. In addition to the earnest application that he devoted to his business interests, he found time for much activity in church work, as a member of the First Reformed Church and its Laymen's Association. He was president of the great Laymen's Missionary Convention held in this city about two years ago and he was head of the Religious Committee of the Y. M. C. A. Among Mr. Titzel's social connections were membership in the Lancaster Lodge of Elks, the American Electric Railways Association, the National Electric Light Association and the American Gas Institute. He was connected with the Lancaster County Historical Society, as was also his wife.

GEORGE R. OBERHOLSER.

George R. Oberholser, a former resident of Reamstown, Lancaster county, was killed on February 8, 1913, in an accident on Lake Erie while riding on an ice boat. Mr. Oberholser, who was forty-five years old, was a son of Isaac Oberholser, a retired farmer of Reamstown. After following the occupation of farming in early life he entered the United States Weather Bureau at Washington, where he received his training that led to his promotion to the position of Superintendent of the Weather Bureau Station at Erie where he was located eight years. He was also connected with the Bureau at Panama for a year. Mr. Oberholser took a lively interest in historical matters, and was a member of the Lancaster County Historical Society. He was a member of the Masonic fraternity. His body was interred near Denver.

JOHN G. HAAS.

John G. Haas, a merchant tailor of this city, died suddenly October 28, 1913. Mr. Haas was born on May 9, 1849, in Bavaria, Germany. He came to Carlisle, Pa., in 1869, and to this city in 1883. In his extensive business he had large patronage in army and navy circles, many of the most distinguished officers being his customers. He was a Trustee of Trinity Lutheran Church, and a member of the Lancaster County Historical Society.

JOHN A. BOYLE.

John A. Boyle passed away on Monday, December 29, 1913. Mr. Boyle was sixty-five years old and a native of Lancaster, having been a son of the late George L. Boyle, who for many years was P. R. R. Station Agent in this city. Mr. Boyle also entered the employ of the P. R. R., starting as a telegraph operator. He later became a brakeman and subsequently a passenger conductor. For forty-two years he was in the passenger service of the company. He was a member of the Lancaster County Historical Society and one of the active members of the Tucquan Club.

LIBRARIAN'S ANNUAL REPORT.

Lancaster, January 2, 1914.

In giving the report of the library for the year 1913 it seems well to call the attention of the members of this Society to the work being done, or the attempt being made, to assist those people who come here in quest of historical knowledge, especially when it concerns our county. Our facilities, as you know, are limited; not so the goodly number of valuable books and pamphlets gathered together during the existence of this Society; therefore, the knowledge sought for has been distributed in many ways to many places, as often as it has been possible to do so, even though conditions for doing this might be much improved. With the close of this year the last of the back numbers of current publications have been bound, bringing all of the issues received by this Society up to date. When the bibliography of the county, which has just been completed, is in print, and with the index of the personal names contained in the papers of the seventeen volumes of our proceedings, just finished, the means of ready reference in our library will be greatly improved. Work along this line will be continued. The donations received during the year have been much appreciated. The largest was from the late Samuel L. Hartman, which, beside books, included furniture and pictures, etc. Mr. B. F. Owen, of Reading, Mr. F. R. Diffenderffer, Mrs. F. M. Christy and Franklin and Marshall College were the contributors of a large number of valuable books and pamphlets. Mr. F. R. Diffenderffer, Mr. N. L. Getz, Mr. Christian Habecker and the Mechanics' Library Association gave a large number of old newspapers, some of which would be impossible to acquire, if desired.

The number of books in the library at the present time is 2,471.

Added during the year..... 120

Twenty-seven volumes in duplicates were given away, on exchange account, hence the increase this year appears smaller than usual.

Lancaster, Pa., January 2, 1914.

In presenting the annual report of the Secretary, it is with much pleasure that I refer to the progress our Society is making in its wide field of activity. The Lancaster County Historical Society has not only won renown in its own historic town, but its accomplishments have attracted attention throughout the State and also the country. This is evidenced by the growing demand for our publications from all sections of the United States, and even from foreign lands, and I am safe in saying that no publications of an historical character rank any higher than do our monthly pamphlets, and there are few that can at all compare in quality of matter and in the general typographical appearance.

The usual ten numbers were issued this year, making a volume of 303 pages, the XVIIth. The papers submitted during the year were on various subjects, all of an interesting character, and they have reflected much credit on the authors. From the first article submitted, that by Mr. F. R. Diffenderffer, on "The First White Man in Pennsylvania," to the splendid essay on the "Life and Works of General John A. Sutter," by Jacob B. Landis, there has been read before our Society a series of productions that fully uphold the high standard long set by this organization.

The membership of the Society has been steadily growing. At the last annual meeting there were 260 names on the roll, while to-day the membership numbers 285. There were 35 members elected during the year. There were nine deaths of members during the year, several of them having been most active in the Society's affairs. Obituaries have been prepared of all of them and they will be published in the pamphlet for the current month.

The Secretary takes pleasure in extending his thanks to the various officers, who have aided greatly in lightening his labors during the year, and especially to the Corresponding Secretary and the Librarian. The latter in fulfilling the duties of her office has been called upon to do a large amount of work, and the excellent condition of the library is a testimonial to the efficient manner in which it has been done. She has spent much time during the year in compiling the bibliography of the Society, and this prodigious work is now completed.

What will the New Year bring forth? No one can tell, but I am safe in the assertion that it will mean another year of still greater activity along the lines we have been working and also a broadening of the usefulness to the community of the Lancaster County Historical Society.

C. B. HOLLINGER,
Secretary.

EARLY COLUMBIA AND VICINITY.

The following paper was read by H. Frank Eshleman, Esq., at the recent anniversary of the founding of the town of Columbia:

Civilized activity opened up on the Susquehanna very early. Three hundred and six years ago Captain John Smith forced his way a short distance up this romantic and boldly picturesque River, and (when his two-ton bark struck upon the rocks), forced his way on by land four days farther. About 1638 the Swedes (who by that time had settled down Delaware River and on the west shore of its Bay—at old Christina, now near Wilmington and Chester) began trading with our Indians on the Susquehanna and up Conestoga; and, according to Campanius, the old roadway or trail from those lower Delaware settlements to and up Susquehanna was visible many years afterwards. About the same year the whole Susquehanna Valley was sold by the Indians to Wm. Clayborne—from source to mouth and forty miles on each side; and he petitioned the British Government to grant him a patent for it also, he guaranteeing to the Crown of England an annual payment of 100 pounds. England was very much angered over this presumption and considerable excitement with Virginia and Maryland ensued. Then from 1640 to 1675, the Susquehanna-Iroquois wars raged along this river, in which thirty-five years many powerful expeditions of the Five Nations descended in brutal savagery upon our giant Susquehannocks here (on this river) and as many return stealthy marches and campaigns were made by our Indians upon their enemies along the St. Lawrence and Great Lakes. The end came in 1675 when the Five Nations, put under the effective leadership of the Senecas, swooped down on the Susquehannocks in September, 1675, and demolished them. Then came Penn to Pennsylvania in 1682. In 1684 he visited the Susquehanna, and in 1685 wrote a glowing description of the fertility of this section. In 1690 Penn had a plan made out and a prospectus issued for the building of a second city like Philadelphia, on the Susquehanna, to be the capital town of a county which he planned, extending from the mouth of the Conestoga fifteen or twenty miles up the river and back eastward into the country; and throughout England he advertised the project and attempted to sell lots there. In 1701 he had executed a carefully detailed plan for the government of this town and county, and an agreement with the persons who bought lots, as to their privileges, etc. It is recorded in Philadelphia, where it remains to this day. Therefore, the plan of Columbia, or at least, of a city on the Susquehanna, is at least thirty years older than Lancaster city. But the project of the Susquehanna collapsed about 1705.

Then came the French traders, trailing throughout this section from about 1705 onward. Then the settlers of Hempfield and Manor, about 1713, began closing in from the east, filling up the regions of the Conestoga until by 1726 the Germans and Swiss had filled to overflowing all the rich valleys to the east, and the tide began to pour over Susquehanna about that time. Then, that same year, came John Wright and the Barbers and Blunston and others—from old Chester—and the English settlement on Susquehanna took definite form.

A great wealth of history clusters about early Columbia. But I assume that the general lines and outlines of that history are well known to you all. At any rate, a locality so long honored by the life and presence of a consummate and tireless historian as was your town, could not help having been informed of the lively past of all this region. You know, of course, that John Wright was the leader in all that was brought about here in earliest times—industrial, civil and political. His activities were, however, more generally devoted to the whole county of Lancaster and to the whole province of Pennsylvania, rather than to local affairs. The times required it. Affairs of the province and inter-provincial with Maryland and of national importance demanded constant attention; and John Wright was by far the most capable man there to administer them. It remained for Samuel Wright, grandson of John Wright, to lay out this town, about fifty years after his grandfather arrived here.

Every community owes a debt of gratitude to the great figures who have lived in it and have done valiant service for it. When a community fully know and realize such service they freely feel that gratitude. All America are grateful to Washington and Lincoln.

Citizens of Columbia, I beg your leave here and now to bring to your minds the services of the real pioneer of this town and the "Father of Lancaster county"—John Wright.

From 1718 to 1726 he was in public life in old Chester, Chester county, of which county we were then a part. He was a justice of the peace and an assemblyman there. He saw greater opportunity and greater need of strong men on the frontier—that is on the Susquehanna—about 1726, as the line between civilization and savagery at that time was the Susquehanna River. All beyond that river was “the wild and woolly West.” In Wright’s career on the Susquehanna, where he lived nearly twenty-five years, the two capacities in which he was the most conspicuous were that of a judge of our county, which included justice of the peace and that of a member of the Assembly. Our county was created in 1729, and he sat as president judge of the courts from that time on until 1741. He presided both over the criminal and civil courts. The sentences that he pronounced upon guilty criminals were generally severe. A counterfeiter he sentenced to be set in the pillory, have both his ears cut off, whipped thirty lashes on his bare back, pay a fine of 100 pounds and pay to all parties who lost money through the counterfeiting, double what they lost. He sentenced both men and women to lashes. Sarah Taylor, for larceny, was sentenced to be whipped. A certain Doctor Smith, found guilty of being an impostor, he sentenced to ten lashes, and, further, that the man be handed from one constable to another down to the Maryland line, be whipped in each township and then be thrown over the line of Maryland. The most important case, however, that he had anything to do with was the riot case in which 300 Marylanders came over and attempted to seize the homes and cattle and property of our people, west of the Susquehanna river, which was a part of Lancaster county, at that time, on the ground that the Susquehanna River was the boundary of Pennsylvania, and that all west of it belonged to Maryland. This was the most noted case of the county, before the Revolutionary War. In 1741 he resigned the judgeship because he knew that he would not be reappointed by the Governor. Wright always contended that the government could not draft the servants, whose services the citizens had bought and paid for, into the army to fight in King George's War. The Governor considered him as an obstructionist; and a person unfaithful to the government. This is why Wright resigned. The last court he held he gave a splendid charge to the grand jury, on the right of private citizens; and touched upon the subject of the dispute between him and the Governor, which charge has always been considered a very able address.

In the Assembly, from the time he began to represent our county, he rapidly rose into prominence, and he was a valuable help in all of the money measures which rose, such as the issuing of paper money and the methods of laying taxes and collecting revenues; and he always advocated strongly laws that would help Lancaster county—laws to reduce the taxes on distilled liquors and wines, etc., made from our own Lancaster county grains and fruits. He showed an intense love for the common people always and even went pretty far in making Mrs. Penn and Penn's sons feel that they were urging too much in the way of revenues out of the people. He became the leader of the agitation to do away with the oath in Pennsylvania and take the affirmation instead. He soon was found on committees to draft laws for the procedure of the courts. Early he had strong hand in making the laws to establish our different courts. He had a law passed, allowing our county to borrow money to build its jail and courthouse. About 1734 we find him very zealously interesting himself, in the Assembly, to make it easy for the Germans here in the county to be naturalized, and to hold land and be able to hold office. When King George's War broke out, he took great pains to oppose our sending troops to Massachusetts and other places to help those provinces in their fighting against Spain and France. From 1741, while a member of the Assembly, he attended very infrequently because of old age, yet he continually exercised himself to have laws passed for the Germans here, in the interest of their agriculture, their health and in their naturalization. He was chairman of the paper money committee, of the Assembly for one or two terms and in his latter years was one of the trustees of the general loan office and as such had the duty of signing the paper money that was issued, same as bank presidents sign bank notes and put them into circulation. John Wright was also the chief agent of the officers of the government of Philadelphia to keep them reminded of the condition on the Susquehanna River. There are a large number of letters, preserved in the archives, between him and the authorities of Philadelphia. On all subjects he was a valuable man. On the subject of Indian treaties and Indian slaughters Wright was a man usually relied upon by the government. On the other hand, the Indians of that region brought their complaints most generally to him. On the disagreeable subject of the boundary between Pennsylvania and Maryland, Wright was always interested. Maryland claimed the Susquehanna River as the boundary. On the subject of arresting the raiders that used to come over from Maryland and raid the Germans and Quakers here, Wright issued the warrants to arrest and try them. On the general subject of keeping the peace, John Wright was the most active man, preventing law-breakers and horse-thieves from becoming numerous.

Wright was the leading figure in creating this county, and he drew up the petition for the separating of the land west of the Octorara Creek into a new county which was called Lancaster county. He circulated that petition among the people and got signers on it. But two petitions were handed in to the Assembly against creating this county, largely by the Germans. They were sent by the Assembly to John Wright and he went to these people and argued the case with them and got many of them over on the side of the new county. When the county was finally formed he had a great deal to do with the starting it off on its new separate duties; and he was made, as I said before, the president judge of the county.

Our cause for taking so much time in speaking of this fine old character and leading figure, in the infant days of this county, and the region which is now Columbia, is that not sufficient is known of this great character, and the work of a fundamental nature that he performed for us. His faith, it would seem, forbade any conspicuous tombstone being placed upon his grave. Indeed, I am not informed whether he has any tombstone at all. He was the undoubted originator or father of his county—and by head and shoulders rose above every other figure in helping civilization at this point on the Susquehanna and in laying the first stone of the foundation of Columbia. For these reasons there ought to be a marker of fit and commensurate size, proportion and dignity set up to his memory, somewhere in this town. The 200th anniversary of his going into public life will arrive in about three or four years. Other anniversaries of events connected with his life will be happening every day from now on—next year will be the 100th anniversary of the granting Columbia's first charter, as a borough.

We plainly see, therefore, that there will be occasions for suitable exercises to be held, by historical bodies, commemorating his life and career and for placing some permanent and suitable memorial above his ashes.

Columbia had a strenuous life in her early days. As we have said, about 1730 it was the principal frontier point in eastern Pennsylvania. Some of the roughest and hardest American life occurred there. Wright established his ferry at this point on the river, and as soon as civilization opened west of the river this became the most famous ferry in America west of Philadelphia and New York. Nearly all the struggles with Maryland centered here. Two bandits, named Lowe, terrorized everybody a year or more, until a body of constables from Lancaster county shot and crippled them in their cabins just opposite Columbia. About 1732, nearly 200 Marylanders appeared opposite the present Columbia and began to battle against the Germans and drive them off by shooting. About 300 men from Lancaster county, under the sheriff, drove them away.

Columbia, therefore, at an early date, was the key to the west. In the frontier days, all matters of importance were centered at this point on the river. It was the point at which all news of the west was first authentically handed over to the public authorities. It was the chief watch tower on the river where alarms were given out to the country of Indian movements, etc. It was the place where expeditions west made their first relay and the base of supplies for all projects into the new and undiscovered sunset land. It was the Waterloo of Maryland's invaders. It was the edge of the woods where the horse thieves of the southwest found efficient officers of the law to arrest them. It was the chief point on the frontier line where the Germans, who held the Hempfield and Manor plains, found the Scotch-Irish politicians, who held the offices and the protecting rifles. It was the place where the wealth of skins and furs were unloaded and bought when brought out of the virgin forests, where the Indians had been cheated by their first being treated to fire water. It was the outlying point where the reign of law met the reign of terror.

In the later days it was the point at which the trade on the river converged, from up and down stream, whence merchandise was sent eastward. But in spite of all human efforts to make the channel profitable, it never succeeded. The merchandise and cattle taken across the river at Wright's Ferry were tremendous in amount. Scores of carriages and wagons were there awaiting their "turn." Some of them had to wait two days sometimes.

Among the prominent events in the life of the town, which was laid out by Samuel Wright in 1788, several may now be mentioned. We note first that this year is the 125th anniversary of the laying out of this town, the event celebrated this week. In 1789 Congress is deciding a permanent place for the government of the United States discussed and debated the advisability of fixing the seat of government on the Susquehanna, and it was moved that the place be on the east bank of the river in Pennsylvania. Wright's Ferry was proposed as the place and debated. An eloquent speech was made in Congress in favor of Wright's ferry on the east bank of the river. Finally the motion passed to locate the capital "on the banks of the Susquehanna." Then a committee of three were appointed to find a suitable place on the east bank of the Susquehanna and $100,000 were appropriated to carry it out, but the Senate defeated the bill. It came up again in 1790, but did not go through. We were left, therefore, with the consolation that for one day (thirteen years before) the neighboring town of Lancaster was capital of the United States.

Your town of Columbia was also honored, in its early days, by three visits from George Washington. These occurred on July 3, 1791, when he went through the town, and the next day was the guest at a banquet in our courthouse, held in his honor.

The second visit was on October 26, 1794; this visit he spoke of in his letter to Alexander Hamilton; in the letter he said, "I have proceeded to Wright's Ferry." This visit was on his return from Carlisle, where he had gone to help quell the whiskey rebellion in western Pennsylvania. Reference is made to this in the Pennsylvania Magazine of History and Biography.

His last visit was September 20 and 21, 1796, and there is not much known of it; it seems that he passed through Lancaster on that visit; but on his visit, in 1794, it is not certain that he was in Lancaster.

I am indebted to George Steinman for confirmatory evidence of these visits of George Washington.

The town progressed apace from 1790 onward. Additions to the original tract were laid out in lots and the limits extended. And by 1814 considerable land was added to it.

In 1807 Samuel Wright conveyed a tract of his land to trustees for a school, and a school building was at once erected in which a school of a semi-public nature was begun. It was built and flourished in 1830.

Private schools were opened as early as 1807 and some of them early became famous. The so-called public school of 1807 was started here by a large meeting of the citizens at which twelve resolutions concerning education were adopted. You have, therefore, a proud record of at least a century and six years of public education to look back upon. Your public instruction began fully twenty-five years before the common school system was adopted. From that time onward your schools have made a record to be proud of.

In public libraries you can look back eighty-four years over a record of credit. Away back in the year 1829 you founded your first library. I am pretty sure there was only one other public library in our county at that date—the old Juliana, of Lancaster, at least seventy-five years older, named in honor of Juliana Penn. You have had both a reading people and an industrious people.

You have had a fine financial record, especially pre-eminent in early days. Your Philadelphia Branch Bank was opened in 1809. For about fifteen years, Philadelphia maintained the Columbia branch of its bank, until local banks were organized here on their own bottoms. The trade from Philadelphia westward made a branch bank here highly important and prevented the danger of carrying money through the wilderness.

Your next bank was a bridge. A charter for the Bridge Company was granted in 1811. The State took $90,000 of the stock, of which $400,000 was sold. About $230,000 of the money was used to build the bridge, and the balance, $170,000, was used for banking purposes. In 1824 a new charter for banking purposes was granted, under the name of "The Columbia Bridge Company." Later it was called the Columbia Bank and Bridge Company—then the Columbia Bank and lastly the Columbia National Bank. In 1863 the First National Bank was organized. There were other early banks, but they did not succeed well.

Your war record is an honor to your town. Your sons brave and true rallied to do their part in all the wars our country has faced.

In fraternal societies you have through many years shown a charity and generosity of spirit hard to equal anywhere, keeping well abreast with the age and keeping in faithful touch of the needs of the unfortunate brethren.

In religious life and activity you are banner bearers. The Friends' Society took hold here as early as 1726. The Methodists, who have been worshippers here about 125 years, first acquired their own church in 1803. The Presbyterians had occasional services here prior to the year 1803, and from 1806 onward had regular services; and about the same time their own church. The Lutherans organized their first congregation about 1806—but, of course, they existed here numerous long before that date. The Reformed grew into a solid congregation about 1805, and have flourished and prospered ever since. The Catholics became a known religious sect here about 1826. The Brethren in Christ were organized about 1846.

These were the original churches in Columbia. And it will be observed that the most of them are 100 years old and over. Thus it may be said that your town has wreathed upon its head a hundred years of religious honor and glory. There have been many branches organized as offspring of these original congregations; and they, too, have prospered and grown strong and mighty.

This, then, is the record of your Columbia—your town that has prospered so well and pushed civilization along so strenuously here on the sunset border of this great county. This epitome of its career is luminous and lustrous—laden with loving memories, that dot and shine down the avenues of the ages, like the numerous stars above your peaceful town. I have passed its career before you, so that you may know and feel it in epitome. Be inspired by it—be proud of it. Stand by your town and applaud it. It has done you good. The citizens here have helped you. Help them. Help your town. It will reach its 100th birthday as a borough next year—in a few months. Welcome in that year—that day—with bells and bonfire—with joy in your hearts and with glad acclaim in your voices. Then will the town take on new life—new vigor and new lustre; and you will realize a good and healthy motto—"Each one for all and all for every one."

PARADISE, O PARADISE.

There has been lying dormant in my system for a period a story—a fairly good one, I think. It has come to me that with proper local tinting it may be so colored as, though not exactly "History herself as seen in her own workshop," yet sufficiently clothed to pass the censorship and be received by the Historical Society under the title of near-history. It concerns early happenings in our district and by this sign may prove acceptable.

By the way, why, except as in logical consonance with our title, should we be strictly held in our papers, to historic composition? The highbrows do not seem to set much store by Clio. Hear them:

"With history I have no patience at all, because it always contradicts the very things I have seen and known."—Blackmore.

"History is a pageant and not a philosophy."—Birrell.

"In history.....we lost sight of truth in the desire to make it truer than itself."—Froude.

"As for history, it is after all but a gazette; the truest is full of falsehood; and it can have not merit but that of style."—Voltaire.

"With the most positive testimony, history can claim only more or less probability."—Volney.

"Books of history that do not lie are stupid."

"History is not a science, it is an art; in it one succeeds through imagination."—Anatole France.

A little rough on history; but here is our salvation:

"It is as useless to quarrel with history as with the weather."—Whitman.

So, pinning my faith to Walt, I submit my blend of story and history to your decision—thus:

Late in the twenties and early in the thirties a company of young, practical scientists engaged in the then novel enterprise of surveying, locating and constructing a railroad across country for a distance of some eighty miles. Railroads of less importance were already in operation in different localities of the country, but this was the first work of like extent undertaken in the State of Pennsylvania. Of the men who essayed this task and in its performance worked out on the ground the then unfamiliar problems of railroad engineering, a number came to be the eminent civil engineers who afterwards grid-ironed the State with the great through routes of rail and waterway which developed the agricultural, mineral and manufacturing resources of the commonwealth.

Among these young engineers was Samuel W. Mifflin, a native Columbian, whose after-professional career was distinguished, embracing service with the major railroads of Pennsylvania, New York, New Jersey and New England, as well as under the United States Government in harbor work on the Great Lakes. He located a considerable mileage of the difficult mountain division of the Pennsylvania Railroad, and was regarded as one of the greatest locating civil engineers of the country. His minor work covered a large area of our own county.

Another noted local man of this company was Joshua Scott, afterward the eminent surveyor of Lancaster county, whose map of his territory is justly esteemed for its wonderful topographical exactness. (May I be permitted a little personal testimony to the merit of this work, in the year 1854, I, a cub civil engineer, was turned loose with this Scott's map as a guide—no previous pioneer examination of the proposed route—to find a practicable line for an intended coal-carrying cross-country railroad from Columbia, on the Susquehanna, to tidewater on the Delaware; and by grace of Joshua Scott, his map, I succeeded in locating my division, extending through Manor, Conestoga, Pequea, Providence, Dummore and Colerain townships, to the border of Chester county, to the satisfaction of my chief, Mr. Mifflin. That the road was never built, more is the pity, had cause in financial stress.)

To get back to my main theme: The proposed route through the garden of the State—the counties of Philadelphia, Montgomery, Delaware, Chester and Lancaster—thickly settled, was furnished with many public stopping places; yet for convenience and possibly for economic reasons, the accommodation of the farm-houses was sought, and, as a rule, cheerfully granted. The good-will of the farmers was essential to the comfort of the engineers, and, in a measure, to the success of the undertaking. With the general believers in and supporters of the enterprise, were, of course, the doubters and skeptics; but the uncontrovertible believer was the exception. Among the fertile fields of Lancaster county was found one of the few "intransigents," whose reply to a polite request for the loan of a bucket was: "You may all go to h—l!" The ready-witted axeman, or chainman, or whatever—the emissary—answered: "Thank you (the flip-pant "Thanks!" was not then the formula), we expect to sleep in Paradise to-night." The party had arranged for quarters in the little village of that name.

In due course of time—no "making the dirt fly" with steam shovels in those days—the road was completed, connecting Philadelphia on the Delaware and Schuylkill rivers with Columbia on the Susquehanna, and was known as the Columbia and Philadelphia Railroad. It was built and owned by the great State of Pennsylvania, which, satisfied to test by half the problem of State ownership, wisely decided not to "work" its new acquisition, but to supply the motive power and leave the accommodation of the expected traffic and travel to private enterprise.

The early operation of the road—the "railroading" technically—would supply an interesting theme; the initial horse-motive-power; the primitive railway carriages (fair imitations of the stage coach of the period—"Billy Hull's Chicken Coops," so disrespectfully known); the stone block sleepers in place of cross-ties; the strap rails spiked to longitudinal timber stringers; with many other peculiarities of line and equipment. But that is another and larger affair. This operation of the road was almost a go-as-you-please. Any man or company able and willing to provide the cars and pay the tolls was free to "run the road."

With varying fortunes these individual or corporate enterprises were conducted, and the survival of the fittest amply served the needs of trade and travel over the route. The passenger carriage eventually narrowed to the "Red" or the "Eagle" and the "Blue" or "Pioneer" lines, respectively Democrat and Whig—for in those good, old strenuous times politics meant "principles" (otherwise, birthright prejudice), not necessarily public plunder—and the man who did not ride as he voted was anathema. One of the trials of my early faith was the free ride of my chum on the "Red," while I had to pay my fare on "Devil Dave" Miller's "Blue." The State exacted a capitation tax on passengers carried over its road, and its politics being then Democratic, the Whig conductor was restricted in granting passes, while the liberality of its rival was indulgently winked at. That this percentage might be duly assessed, each train carried beside the competing "Agents"—that was the name then—a neutral "State Agent," whose eye was supposed to check the number of passengers; a forerunner of the street-car "spotter" of later date. Why kept tab on the syndicate of three, unless it was the recording angel, tradition does not tell.

The opening of this route stirred to enterprise the hitherto sleepy community, and the village on its course which didn't have a "line," or, at least, individual freight cars, was exceptional. The inscriptions: "Leech's Line, "Union Line," "Pioneer Line," and the like, indicating the various ownership of the passing cars, became as familiar to the dwellers along the railroad as the natural features of the landscape, or as their houses and barns.

In the final location and construction of the road our hospitable Paradise had been left some half-mile to the south, and a spur track had been built by the private enterprise of a "live" citizen, connecting his warehouse with the main line. Up and down the railway, with hundreds of others, ran his freight cars, on which was blazoned: "Witmer—Paradise."

Naturally, the western terminus of the road, Columbia, at that time a town of some thousands of inhabitants, prospered. Here was the depot for "up-river" products—grain, spirits, and especially lumber in its several rough-manufactured forms. This traffic was by raft and "ark" on the spring and fall freshets of the Susquehanna river in assemblage, and by Conestoga wagons in distribution, mainly via the Lancaster and Susquehanna turnpike. The town, admirably situated for internal trade, had the great advantage of a bridge over the wide river, thus commanding the wagon-route between east and west. The citizens were enterprising, as shown by the influence which fixed the western terminus of the railroad at this point; and the coming of the iron way greatly enhanced the business and swelled the population of the town.

The lumber interest, already important, at once largely increased, and the terminal mile of rails was laid between ranks of piled lumber—millions of feet of "sawed stuff"—boards, joists, rafters, lath, etc., etc., of pine and hemlock. The main depot for "timber" was Marietta, though some "spar" and hewn-timber rafts tied up at the Columbia shore—there were then few improved wharves. With the opening of the Pennsylvania canal, another State work, supplemental to the railroad already in operation, terminating at Columbia, the navigation of the Susquehanna by "arks" practically ceased, and the river floods brought only rafts. These found market with the many large dealers of the town, and the handling of this immense supply of rough lumber was the chief labor problem of the place, supplying abundant work for the numerous colored citizens of the "Hill."

The washing, "drawing," inspection and piling of lumber went on for weeks, giving life to the usually quiet river banks. The inspection consisted of the separation of the lumber into grades and the marking of its superficial feet, board measure, and was the work of experts. The labor of washing and drawing was exhausting, but was carried on at high pressure, generally under contract by a boss of the same complexion as was the colored working force, whose word was law. One exceptionally compelling taskmaster boasted: "Some niggers wucks dar men from sun to sun; I wucks mine from stah to stah!" And they were a happy, contented lot, willing to work. They refrained from dissipation during the season; but, work-time over!!! They tramped homeward at evening through the alleys, at speed, singing in concert—the mellow song of the negro—suggesting their former plantation custom.

This great lumber trade brought into the town on the spring floods always, and on the fall rise whenever favoring Providence sent the latter rains, a motley and picturesque horde of raftsmen—pilots, steersmen, hands—locally known as "Yankees." They came from the upper tier of Pennsylvania and the lower tier of New York counties, bordering the headwaters. Their dialect was the stage New England vernacular, a trifle exaggerated, if possible. The unwieldy craft were steered from the front end—one can scarcely call it bow—and the managing of the long front and rear oars, or sweeps, was important and arduous in the many "breaks," falls and currents of the rock-studded river in flood. The crews came from the affluents where the lumber was sawed and the rafts confectioned; and at Columbia the pilots for the lower river took charge with their own relief of hands. From here the run was to "Port" (Port Deposit), and was generally made in part of a day. At that time there was no "port" railroad or Susquehanna and Tide water Canal for return travel, so the crews "footed" in back to Columbia, ready for the next day's trip. In the year 1854, the writer on a projected railway survey along the face of the river hills westward from Safe Harbor, found what was known as the "Yankee path," a firm trodden path on the face of turkey hill, sometimes climbing to the summit to avoid such impassable cliffs as "the Buzzard." This path may still exist.

To accommodate this transient influx, in addition to the large and excellent stores of merchandise for their generous trading, were many inns, especially in Front street, where the prevailing drought found irriguous relief in a fairly sound article of "rye." Away up at the west end lay the Canal Basin, a section apart, where the great transportation companies had their warehouses for the transshipment of freight. Here, too, taverns were plentiful, for accommodation of the canal boatmen, another and different tough crowd, which passed back and forth during the entire season of canal navigation. These men, earning a smaller wage than the liberally-paid rivermen, were served with a proportionately cheaper and more potent drink.

Among the old inhabitants of the place was a good citizen with a family of sons and daughters of varying degrees of respectability. Of distinguishing idiosyncrasy was one boy—the black sheep of the flock. He was utterly worthless; had lovable qualities withall to which some of his kin were absolute strangers; and he was without an enemy in the town. He was well-grown in his upper teens when I, a slip of a boy, saw, like Joshua, of old, the sun stand still, and felt “the polar axis grind” and the jar as the earth paused in its roll and my heart in its beat, when he skated into the Susquehanna, well out towards the middle of its mile-wide stream. The Good Genius which watches over children falling from upper windows, and over the drunkard in his devious and wayward career, was on his job, and buoyed up the vaurien as he broke his way to solid ice and safety. A really good boy would have drowned. The fellow did not even take cold—possibly preserved by the inner warmth which had led him into his foolhardy risk.

Of course, his was a hopeless case; the more so that when he “broke out” he abandoned the comparatively innocuous exhilarant of his own neighborhood and sought the “fire-water” of the canal basin. On one of these outbreaks, on a balmy night of summer, he headed homeward very late, and, having enough remaining sense to realize that it was an undue hour to attempt the shelter of home, wandered to the "board yards," climbed one of the highest piles—some twenty feet—stretched himself on the springy boards, rolled off to a lower pile and slept the sleep of innocence.....

The morning broke with an angry east. A fiery beam burst through the crimson curtain and shone full upon the face of the sleeper. As he struggled to consciousness, the Basin whisky was rightly punishing the sins of overnight. Hades was not in that day the discredited slum it has since come to be. In the fiery glow of sunrise the sinner recognized the undying flames promised as his portion, and realized that he was then receiving all that was coming to him. He gathered strength to turn from the curdling terror. He rolled over, and there, a few feet from his eyes, he read the legend: Witmer—Paradise; the agonized face relaxed; a grateful smile broke over it, and, with a fervently breathed, "Paradise! Thank the Lord!" again he slept as a little child.

Special Gifts—Old Bible, printed at Basel, Switzerland, in 1665 (once the property of the Shaffner family, of Lancaster), containing six very curious maps, from Mrs. J. H. Baumgardner; number of the Society's pamphlets, from Mrs. Charles Emory Long; a song book, made in 1807—very unusual, as it is made entirely by hand, with pen and ink, though it looks like print, from Mr. Daniel H. Heitshu; a German programme, from Dr. R. K. Buehrle; list of burials in Morrison's graveyard, near Hensel P. O., from Mrs. Bertha Whitney, Broome county, N. Y.; old papers of a patent granted to Michael Withers in 1813, from Mrs. J. H. Baumgardner; an engraving of Gen. John Fulton Reynolds, from his niece, Mrs. John Scott, Jr., of Philadelphia; the Moravian Messenger, special Rally Day number, compendium issued by the Lancaster County Sunday-school Association, from Prof. J. B. Landis.

Miss Bausman also presented a report of the meeting of the State Federation of Historical Societies at Harrisburg, January 15, at which our local society was well represented.

On motion, the following persons were elected to membership: Mrs. A. M. Breneman. Hervey N. Hurst, Frank S. Everts, of this city, and Miss Helen E. Myers, of Mt. Joy.

Mrs. M. D. Owen Chahoon, of Washington, D. C., was nominated for membership.

A paper on the subject "Paradise, O Paradise," written by Colonel Wright, of Columbia, was read by Miss Clark. It was most entertaining.

A paper on "Early Columbia and Vicinity," read by H. Frank Eshleman, Esq., at the recent celebration in Columbia, was read by A. K. Hostetter.

Both papers were referred to the Executive Committee for the matter of publication.

There being no further business, the Society adjourned.

THE STORY OF CAERNARVON.

The township of Caernarvon is the most easterly of the townships that collectively make Lancaster county the keystone in agricultural wealth in the United States.

Settled in Colonial days, peopled in the beginning by a sturdy race of men, its history in the almost 200 years of its existence is one that appeals to those who love their native heath, and desire to know the past, not from tradition, but from history, that made Caernarvon in days gone by a famous center of successful manufacturing industries and agricultural pursuits and people it with men who in their generation stood in the front rank of Lancaster county's financial strength.

The Creator, in His wisdom, caused a generous gift of the beauties of nature to be distributed to this fertile land.

Situated in the famous valley of the Conestoga, enclosed by wooded hills and traversed through the southern border from east to northwest its entire length by the Conestoga river, it bears all the charms that nature can bestow to create a charming landscape.

On the south are the beautiful Welsh Mountains, whose skyline and sloping ridges, as the sun descends on a summer evening—the rich green foliage of the mountain trees, the gorgeous flowers of the wild geranium showing here and there on the ridges—makes a picture that would charm the eye of any artist, who loves nature as the Creator presents it, and impresses on the mind a natural canvas that never can fade from memory.

Eastward the township narrows to a marked degree. On the north, the forest hills are seen, beautiful, indeed, but with more pronounced rugged skyline.

Chestnut Hill, California Hill, Patontown Hill, Stone Hill, Laurel Hill, Turkey Hill, are the rivals in mountain scenery to the Welsh Mountains.

The township is traversed from east to west, centrally, by a limestone ridge that rises and falls in an undulating wave, forming in the center of the township a bold, treeless limestone ridge called "Maxwell's Hill." North the land slopes to the Little Creek, a tributary of the Conestoga River, thence rises to the base of the Forest Hills.

South the trend is to the same river, thence upward to the base of the Welsh Mountains, giving to the land a gently-rolling appearance.

The soil is limestone, ironstone and red shale, the first named predominating.

Looking westward from Churchtown, situated on the high ridge, the view of the Conestoga Valley surpasses imagination. As far as the eye can see, the valley presents a charming landscape—the winding Conestoga, hamlets, villages, towns, boroughs, farmhouses, the spires of distant churches, the Lebanon hills, outlines of the Blue Mountains, appear to the enraptured gaze, as a great stereopticon. To the onlooker, a feeling of gratitude is created in the heart that silently makes us thankful that we are in life and able to behold the work of our Creator.

The vale of Cashmere, historic as it is; the dells and crags of Scotland, so dear to the Highlander; the shires of old England, to the Briton, none of these can outclass the natural beauties of Caernarvon—not in the opinion of one whose boyhood days were, fortunately, spent in this historic land of promise.

As a staunch defender of Caernarvon, it is but natural that, with pardonable pride, I should champion her right to be in the foremost rank, not only as an historic vale, but as a land that has produced iron masters of the highest character and success, Congressmen, agriculturists and people who have been in the past and are in the present, English, Mennonites, Amish, a bulwark to the fame of Caernarvon.

The Settlement.

Forestalling the admonition of Horace Greeley, long before his birth—"Young Man, Go West"—the emigrant as soon as he disembarked from the sailing vessel that brought him, after a tedious voyage across the stormy Atlantic, and his feet trod the soil of a new world, the instinct of the pioneer turned his gaze to the westward, and with firm heart and fixed purpose he sought to find a location in the land of Pennsylvania, where he could make his future home. The men who came to build homes on the invitation of the far seeing Quaker were not Cavaliers, who "spun not, neither did they toil," but they were God-fearing men of personal courage and steadfast purpose.

For such men as these, our forefathers, let us be thankful. One of these hardy men, Gabriel Davies by name, pushing westward, located, by a propertary patent from John, Thomas and Richard Penn, 450 acres of land in what is now Eastern Caernarvon.

The patent was entered on record on November 1, 1718, in Philadelphia, in Patent Book A A, Volume 1, page 276. On this land a saw mill was erected during 1718, and later, 1721, a grist mill. On April 1, 1741, part of this tract was deeded to John Jenkins by Mr. Davies, the deed being acknowledged before Thomas Edwards, one of His Majesty's Justices of the Peace, and who was afterwards Judge Edwards, of the Lancaster County Court.

In 1765 John Jenkins built a colonial mansion on the land purchased from Gabriel Davies, standing and occupied at present, using for joists in the cellar of the house part of the old sawmill erected in 1718. Through the Gabriel Davies tract flows the Conestoga River. The first dam in Caernarvon was built to supply the saw and grist mill. This was the first permanent settlement in Caernarvon. Others followed. January 10, 1733, John Jenkins negotiated for a tract of 400 acres of land westward from the Gabriel Davies land, but the patent was not executed at that time. Nine years later he sold the tract to Mr. Branson, of Philadelphia, who took out the patent on December 28, 1742, and who erected a forge, and, soon after, built the fine old-time mansion known as Windsor. The iron business was started, and, as partners, three Englishmen—Lynford Lardner, Samuel Flower and Richard Hockley—were associated.

Mr. Branson sold out to his partners, who continued in the business for thirty years. In their employ as a clerk, was a young man, David Jenkins by name, of Welsh ancestry, who was the great-great-grandfather of the writer on the maternal side. In 1773, he purchased the half-interest of the Company for £2500, and, later, just prior to Lexington and Bunker Hill, the remaining half.

No doubt, the cloud of war gathering over the colonies, and vision of financial disaster, prompted the English owners, as loyal subjects of the truculent George the III., to leave the patriotic land of Caernarvon. Other tracts of land—the lands east and west of Churchtown—were now rapidly taken up, and we find the name of Gabriel Davies attached to many old-time deeds. In 1736 Morgan John was granted a patent for 143 acres of land fronting on the Great Road, the road passing through Churchtown and constructed in 1724 to the "Bangor Churchtown." This farm changed hands four times since 1736, being in the Jacob Hertzler family and descendants for eighty years.

But to return to David Jenkins. After his full purchase of the Windsor estate, he continued the iron business until 1800, when his son, Robert Jenkins, assumed charge. Dying in 1848, his son, David Jenkins, carried on the business until 1850, when the forge property, for a number of years until 1868, was continued by different persons, the last being Mr. John Mentzer, of Pottstown.

The Jenkins family, from David, the first single proprietor of Windsor, from 1773 to his grandson, David, who died 1850, was one which not only made a success of the early iron business, but as an intellectual and scholarly family left its impress on succeeding generations. David Jenkins, the elder, had three sons, David, Jr., William and Robert. David became a farmer. William was a prominent lawyer of Lancaster, at one time, for fourteen years, president of the Farmers' (now Trust Company) Bank, and who built "Wheatland," the residence in after years of James Buchanan, the fifteenth President of the United States.

Robert Jenkins, the iron-master, was of scholarly attainments and a gentleman of the old school. The writer has in his possession a Greek Testament in 1651, and on a blank page is written these words: "Mark well your steps and tread the paths of virtue." Robert Jenkins, Nassau Hall, Princeton, N. J., March 31, 1795.

The Windsor iron works was a community of interest. A fatherly interest in everything tending to uplift was manifested in the treatment of the employes. They were, in turn, faithful to the core. They could approach their employer with the freedom of man to man. No strikes, unions, or other annoyances, now so prevalent, disturbed the proprietor. The forgemen, colliers, wood choppers, farm hands, one and all, received from Mr. Jenkins most generous treatment in their business relations. The employes received liberal wages, and, in turn, were grateful and faithful in their work.

Many families of workmen, from father to son, remained with the Windsor forge to the end. The Epphimers, Silknitters, Johnsons, Wilhours, and many others, are now gone, none of the name residing in the vicinity. One particular man—Louis Hyer, an employe between 1780 and 1795—was said to be the grandfather of "Tom Hyer," a celebrated prizefighter of the fifties.

The Windsor mansion was as welcome a resting place for the traveling circuit rider or any clergyman as an oasis in the desert to the weary and heavy-laden caravan. Mrs. Jenkins was a woman of noble impulse, a strict Presbyterian, deeply religious. It was her delight to extend the hospitality of the mansion to the religious representatives of all denominations. As a mistress, her courteous treatment of her servants, and her solicitude for their welfare, stamped her as a lady not only by birth and surrounding, but by precept.

Not many years ago I met an aged woman in the northwestern part of this State. Her general appearance showed a strong likeness to the family, especially to one of the male members, whom I remembered very well in my boyhood days. In the course of conversation she remarked that she was a native of Lancaster county, and further inquiry led to the fact that at one time she lived at Windsor Mansion, when it was in its bloom, and it was a pleasure to hear her relate, and express in grateful words, her admiration for Mrs. Jenkins as being a just mistress.

Of the daughters of Robert Jenkins and Catherine Carmichael, all married distinguished men. The late Mrs. Martha J. Nevin, wife of Rev. Dr. John Wilberforce Nevin, late president of Franklin and Marshall College, was born at Windsor. Her children are well and favorably known, not only in literature, but in the arts. Miss Blanche Nevin, her daughter, the sculptress, now owns and occupies the mansion of her forefathers (a portion of the Windsor farm being included). The remainder of the farm, of some 550 acres, is (with two ex-

Mr. Robert Jenkins accumulated a liberal fortune in the iron business, his landed possessions being 4,000 acres. As a business man and a public-spirited citizen, he served the county as Congressman from 1807 to 1811. In his day and generation his life was well spent, and his memory one of a just man.

To return to the old forge. Lyndford Lardner must have rebuilt the forge, as over the doorway of the lower Windsor forge was placed a stone marked "L. Lardner, 1753." The exact spot where the Branson forge stood is known only by conjecture, as the remains of an old dam breast in Upper Windsor dam indicates its use for the first forge erected about 1743, and nearer the mansion. One hundred and twenty-five years rolled by and an evil day came upon the Old Windsor Forge (lower). About seven years after it had ceased operation forever, on a calm day in May, 1875, a rumbling noise was heard, and a great cloud of dust arose in the direction of Lower Windsor. The ancient iron works, that had started in manufacturing charcoal iron in Colonial times, under the rule of a King, had prospered and created wealth for its owners under a republic, and the rule of Presidents from Washington, the founder of the Republic, to Lincoln, the victor, for its preservation, lay prone upon earth—the walls, roof and chimneys all in a mass of wreck.

It had served its purpose well—the end had come—true, it lives now in memory.

The stone over the doorway, fortunately, was not broken, and is now one of the corner stones in the north-

Pool Forge.

About the year 1770 James Old, who worked at Lower Windsor during the occupancy by the English Company, and who was a man of business ability, purchased a tract of land about three-quarters of a mile west of Windsor, along the Conestoga, and erected thereon a forge, Pool Forge by name. He prospered, and on July 13, 1795, he sold the forge and farm of 783 acres to his son, Davis Old.

However, a new star appeared in the iron industry of Caernarvon, who, in his day, was the most successful iron manufacturer and the largest land owner of valuable farms and woodland at the time of his death, in 1830, that ever graced the iron business of Lancaster county, a veritable Carnegie of his day and generation.

This man was Cyrus Jacobs. Born in 1760, dying in 1830. In his business life of probably forty-two years he amassed a fortune in that time that was colossal, and, had his descendants handled this vast estate with the same keen judgment and business ability as he displayed in acquiring it, a Vanderbilt fortune would have resulted.

When we take into consideration that Mr. Jacobs owned no iron ore mines, no furnace to produce pig iron, but made his fortune in buying pig iron, hauling it twenty miles to his forges, there converting it into charcoal blooms and bar iron, then hauling it to Philadelphia, fifty miles distant, we feel that as an early charcoal iron master he stood alone, a tower of business ability and financial integrity.

Mr. Jacobs was a son of Richards

Jacobs, born near Perkiomen, Chester county. He came to Pool Forge a young man unversed in the iron business. Endowed with a keen, perceptive mind and business ability of the highest type, his active mind and far-seeing judgment led him to anticipate a great future in the iron trade. His employer, James Old, he served faithfully a number of years, and, having married Mr. Old's daughter, Margaret, purchased, in the fall of 1789, when he was twenty-eight years of age, what was known as the Edwards farm, patented to Thomas Edwards on various dates from April 3, 1735, to September 21, 1745, recorded in Patent Book A, Vol. 7, page 149, and in Book A, Vol. 12, page 359. When Mr. Jacobs bought the tract from the administrators of David Morgan, who then owned the farm, it contained 283 acres. Mr. Jacobs at once began the construction of a dam and erection of a forge. The breast of the dam was made so high that it caused the waters to encroach on his neighbors' lands, compelling him to purchase nine additional tracts of land before he had a clear title to the water right and power, which at that time was the best on the Conestoga River. The forge had two hammers, enabling the owner to turn out as much iron in one day as Windsor and Pool forges could do in two days. In 1795 Mr. Jacobs built the splendid Spring Grove mansion, fronting south on the Conestoga, of Colonial type, stone in construction, 60 by 40 feet, containing thirty-two rooms, finished in keeping with the estate he owned. As it stands to-day, it is one of the finest old-time mansions in Lancaster county.

In its palmy days the surroundings savored of the residence of an English squire. The garden surrounded by a stone wall, the garden beds edged with box wood. old-time flowers and rose bushes in fragrant abundance, the yard terraced to the race that led from the forge dam, great trees, especially noted two giant pines in front of the house, a great porch the entire length of the house, carved and finished by old-time master house builders, made Spring Grove a miniature kingdom.

How many hallowed memories clustered around this mansion! How many changes have occurred since the first occupancy! From happy recollections to sad reflections.

It was in this mansion that the late Bishop Potter wedded Miss Eliza Jacobs, the granddaughter of Cyrus Jacobs, and Miss Eliza M. Jacobs, the daughter of Mr. Jacobs, was joined in wedlock with Moulton Rogers, Esq., a prominent lawyer of Lancaster, Pa.

Years passed by, wealth accumulated under the untiring industry of the owner. In 1799, May 2, Mr. Jacobs purchased Pool Forge and its 783 acre farm from Davis Old, his brother-in-law, for £10,000, and started the forge with double hammers.

There was an old saying that "everything he touched turned into gold." However, it was not the magic wand of a sorcerer, but the ability, good judgment, and strict attention to his business propositions that caused this stream of gold to flow into his coffers. His forges, the fires always glowing, the heavy hammers pounding away, whether the demand for iron was urgent or slow, placed him in the position of being fully prepared at all times to supply the market on a quick demand.

Windsor, Pool and Spring Grove forges secured their charcoal pig iron from Elizabeth furnace, in Elizabeth township, Warwick, in Chester county, Joanna, in Berks, and Hope-well in Crester county.

For some reason no furnaces were ever erected on the Conestoga River east of Lancaster. Though undiscovered until late in the fifties, large bodies of iron ore existed in Caernarvon.

The Evans Mine, of Beartown, Garman, Shirk's and many sma'ller mines southeast of Churchtown have been worked, the output going to furnaces at Birdsboro and Joanna in Berks county. The great expense incurred in getting the ore to the surface caused the final abandonment of these sources of supply in 1878.

Of Mr. Jacobs' immediate family—fourteen children—the majority died in early life. Samuel O. Jacobs, on the death of his father, inherited by will the Spring Grove estate. He gave promise of a useful life, but died when comparatively young, 1836, in the twenty-ninth year of his age, his son, William Boyd Jacobs, inheriting the estate. He was a graduate of Yale College, a gentleman in the true sense of the word. In 1866 he sold the farm and forge to Peter Zimmerman, and thus, after an uninterrupted prosperity for three-fourths of a century, the finest estate in Lancaster county passed from the hands of the Jacobs family for all time. The old-time garden, the terraced lawn, the great pine trees, all have been obliterated. Ten farms have been created out of the almost six hundred acres owned by the elder Mr. Jacobs at the time of his decease. The whirligig of time spares neither estate nor individual. Original Spring Grove now contains sixty-six acres with the old-time mansion.

In the latter years of Mr. Jacobs' life he resided at White Hall, half a mile north of Churchtown. He was living there in 1820, as I have read a letter (through the courtesy of one of his descendants) written him by James Buchanan, then a prominent Lancaster attorney, relating to the contemplated purchase of some property. Mr. Jacobs expired very suddenly in May, 1830, at White Hall. His will, made in 1829, shows the comprehensive intelligence this remarkable man had in executing it. In detail he describes himself as "Iron Master and Farmer." In both he was a remarkable success. As a farmer he owned in farms alone Spring Grove farm and forge, Pool farm and forge, Federal Hall, White Hall, Hampden, the Clymer farm in Berks county, mills, houses, etc. His landed possessions totaled 9,000 acres, farms and woodlands. His personal property represented a value of over $282,000. His farms all contained, on an average, hundreds of acres. Through the courtesy of his great grandson, Mr. John H. Jacobs, of Churchtown, I am enabled to place before you his will and an inventory of his personal estate.

Robert Jenkins, Cyrus Jacobs, as Lancaster countains, we can look upon the history of their lives, neighbors, the men of the forges, the colliers and wood choppers.

The late General H. Bentley Jacobs, the grandson of Cyrus Jacobs, married Miss Catharine Jenkins, daughter of Robert Jenkins, of Windsor, a man of fine, gentlemanly mien and had friends amongst all classes. Unfortunately, the liberality and kindly generosity of these people did not tend to conserve the great fortune of their distinguished ancestor.

Traditions.

As the ivy clings to ruined and deserted mansions, so do traditions attach themselves to the history of old-time iron families.

A tradition can only be one of two things. It is either derogatory, or, on the other hand, harmlessly jocular. Traditions have there been in old Caernarvon. Some, I regret to say, derogatory, others, harmless. To refer to them in this paper would be very ungenerous indeed. "Let the dead past bury its dead."

Of Mr. Jacobs' grandchildren, Cyrus Jr., started for California as a forty-niner. Whilst going by steamboat to St. Joe, Missouri, on the Mississippi River, he attempted to draw some water for his horse. Losing his balance, he plunged overboard, his body never being recovered. He was the son of Samuel O. Jacobs, and brother of William Boyd Jacobs, the last owner of historic Spring Grove.

The Episcopal Church in Caernarvon.

In 1730 the first church (Episcopal) was erected. The settlers at that time were English and Welsh and adhered to the Church of England.

The old Bangor Church record recites thus: "They (the settlers) found no place would be agreeable to them without the public worship of God, and unanimously and cordially agreed, according to their worldly possessions, to build a church of square logs and name it Bangor, after a diocese of that name in Wales in old England. The names of the members who contributed to and built the church are as follows:

Thomas Williams, Phillip Davies,
George Huttson, Reese Davies
Nathan Evans, Thomas Morgan,
Morgan John, Gabriel Davies,
John Bowers, Hugh Davies,
Nicholas Huttson, David Davies.
Evans Hughes, John Davies,
Zaccheus Davies, Morgan Evans,
Geo. Huttson, Sr., Charles Huttson,
Edward Nicholas, Thomas Nicholas,
John Davies.

The first pastor was Rev. Griffith Hughes.

In 1754 a new stone church was built and Nathan Evans contributed £100, a liberal gift for that age. The third church was built probably after the War of 1812, but I have been unable to find an account of the exact year. The church was remodeled in 1879, being Gothic in style.

The stone work in the front of this church is a fine example of the workmanship of the old-time masons, and the white and red sandstone are so arranged as to be very pleasing to the eye. On the eastern side of the church wall are a number of honeycombed stone with the names of the donors of the original church carved thereon. The graveyard surrounding the church contains some ancient tombs and gravestones. The oldest is marked in memory of Mary Edwards, who died June, 1741, aged three years. In the southeast corner are buried many of the Jacobs family, including the progenitor of their family, Cyrus Jacobs; early members of the Jenkins family; Lieut. Col. Jonathan Jones, of the Seventy-second Regiment of the line, Pennsylvania, in the Continental army; Owen Thomas, who died in 1830, a soldier of the Revolution; Leonard Garman, a Revolutionary wagonmaster. The old church book contains many quaint entries on different subjects. On October 12, 1811, a meeting of the corporation of Bangor was held to settle a misunderstanding between the teacher of the parish school and the committee. It was settled by the pedagogue being allowed to hold his position. May 2, 1814, Edward Davies, church warden, for the church, invested in the stock of the Union Bank of Lancaster, $250, five shares at $50 per share. The above bank not going into operation, the $250 was returned to the church with $4.00 interest.

Not a word is mentioned in the record book of the Revolution. Rev. Thomas Barton, being rector and a Loyalist, could not refuse to invoke divine blessing upon George the Third. This certainly provoked the liberty-loving parishioners, and the reverend gentleman resigned. Whether the Pequea (Compassville) P. E. Church have written proofs to claim erection of their church prior to 1730 or not I do not know. The congregation of the Episcopal Church has dwindled down to a small number. The old church is still in a fine condition. A number of years ago, on the death in Vermont of Mr. William Boyd Jacobs, he left by will $5,000, to be held in trust for the use of the church. He had been a consistent member of the church until he removed from the scene of his boyhood and manhood days in 1867.

A visit to this church and a stroll through the churchyard, where sleep the forefathers who in life performed the duties laid down before them in their various walks of life, from the wealthy to those of more humble station, recalls in part the words of Gray:

"Each in his narrow cell forever laid
The rude forefathers of the hamlet sleep.

The cock's shrill clarion, or the echoing horn
No more shall rouse them from their lowly bed.

The boast of heraldry, the pomp of power
And all that beauty, all that wealth e'er gave Await alike th' inevitable hour,
The paths of glory lead but to the grave.

Can storied urn or animated bust,
Back to its mansion call the fleeting breath?
Can Honour's voice provoke the silent dust,
Or flattery soothe the dull, cold ear of death?"

The Methodist congregation was formed in the thirties. A great many of the employes of the forges were strict adherents of the Methodist Church and devout churchmen. The congregation is the strongest in the town.

In 1844 a Presbyterian Church was built, being liberally aided by the family of Mr. Robert Jenkins. In the graveyard Mr. and Mrs. Jenkins are interred and a number of their children and descendants. I regret to note that the congregation is practically nil.

The Mills.

The first desire of the early settlers and the cry for bread led to the prompt building of a mill, this necessary adjunct of the settlement to produce the "staff of life."

Gabriel Davis was, as I have mentioned, the first to build a grist mill. In 1750 John Jenkins erected a mill and in 1816 George Jenkins erected a new mill on the site of the old mill. It is still in use, and is known as Hertzler's mill, owned by John Z. Hertzler. It is situated a mile and a half southeast of Churchtown, on the original Gabriel Davies tract. In 1742 a tract of land west of Churchtown was deeded to Jacob Light by John Thomas and Richard Penn. On this land, about 1750, Mr. Light built two mills, one, now known as Caernarvon Mill, owned by S. D. Martin, the other known as McCormick's, later as Yohn's mill, now owned by Henry S. Martin.

The Roads.

The earliest record in the township book has this as the first entry, on November 13, 1763: "By cutting a road from old Lewis home to John Jenkins' mill and from John Jenkins' mill to the top of the Welsh Mountains £5,5s,9d." "November 21, 1763—By mending the great road from Stony Bank to John Yoder's fence at Maxwell's Hill, £1,7s,9d."

The great road was the King's highway, and extended to Chester Valley from Lancaster. A curious entry in the old book is as follows: "List of servants May 8, 1773—Line Servants to David Jenkins—Mulatto Maud, Mulatto George, indentured until the age of thirty-one, September 14, 1780. Mulatto Poll the same."

In 1819 a road was built south and southwest from Churchtown that intersected the road leading from Pool Forge to the top of the Welsh Mountains at Sandy Hollow.

Persons of Note.

Among the many notable persons who have graced the neighborhood with their citizenship in the past, and they are legion, one in particular of national naval fame passed his last days near Churchtown..

This man was Commodore Elliott, of the United States navy. As Captain of the sloop of war Niagara, at the battle of Lake Erie, it was his ves-sei that decided the fate of that engagement. The flagship Lawrence a wreck, Commodore Perry shifted his flag in the midst of a heavy fire to the Niagara, and, sailing through the British squadron, firing broadsides right and left, compelled the Union Jack to be lowered in token of surrender. In after years Captain, then Commodore, Elliott commanded the frigate Constitution on a cruise of three years around the world.

After retiring, the Commodore resided with his son-in-law, Mr. Thomas Jacobs, at Hampton farm, one-half mile north of Churchtown. Like all the old sea fighters of the day of wide-spreading canvas, he had the peppery temper that was necessary in their maintaining order on board ship in the old days of the United States navy.

Being somewhat disabled, he was on one occasion carried out to his carriage. He remarked to those around: "You had better get a band and have them play the dead march from Saul." The Commodore died in 1845.

In the "thirties" Martin Bickham, an Englishman by birth, purchased three farms in the neighborhood of Churchtown—the Owen Thomas farm, Federal Hall farm and the George Jenkins farm, near Hertzler's Mill. The latter farm is now owned by Count DuPont, of Paris, France, and tenanted by Mr. Martin Bickham, the grandson of Martin Bickham.

Though an Englishman by birth, Mr. Bickham was an American citizen, and for a number of years, from 1816, United States Consul to the Isle of Mauritius.

He married a French lady of noble birth while residing in Mauritius, and his only child, the late Stephen Girard Bickham, of Caernarvon, was born on that island.

Mr. Bickham was for many years confidential agent of Stephen Girard, the philanthropist, merchant prince, and the founder of Girard College.

The late James McCaa, of Churchtown, was a Scotchman by birth, having first seen the light of day in Dumfriesshire, Scotland.

Coming to America as a small boy, he finally located in Caernarvon township, afterwards removing to Churchtown.

Having Scotch persistence and a well-balanced mind, he succeeded in life.

His business ability was such that he settled many estates, and was one of the executors of the Windsor estate when the final settlement of the heirs occurred.

He was for many years a Justice of the Peace in Caernarvon. As a student of Burns, with his pronounced Scotch accent, it was a pleasure to hear him read "The Cotter's Saturday Night" and "Highland Mary."

Edward Davies, a descendant of a grandson of Cyrus Jacobs, Esq., the ironmaster.

In 1838 Mr. Jacobs, on a tract of land one-half mile west of Churchtown, which consisted of 146 acres, erected a Colonial mansion, and christened the farm "Ashland," in honor of Henry Clay, "The Mill Boy of the Slashes," whose Kentucky home, "Ashland," was the residence of the distinguished Compromiser.

The era in which these people lived, like themselves, has passed forever. No more the old-time mansions will resound with the gaieties of the past days. The descendants of the early settlers, like birds from the nest, are scattered to the four winds.

A new regime has appeared, generations have changed, and the once-famous neighborhood surrounding Churchtown has conformed to the existing conditions.

A Word on Churchtown.

This village, founded prior to 1730, is situated almost in the center of the township, on the high ridge. In the days of the forges it was a busy hive of industry. Tailors, shoemakers, hatmakers, cabinet and chairmakers, harness shops, blacksmiths, Conestoga wagon builders and nearby fulling mills gave employment to many persons, and an air of prosperity was evident to the traveler.

The Pennsylvania Gazetteer of 1798 thus describes the town at that date: "A post town in Caernarvon township, Lancaster county, Pa., distant twenty miles from Lancaster, east by north, and east by south from Philadelphia fifty miles. In the environs are two charcoal forges producing 450 tons of bar iron annually." This was in the days of candles and fat lamps.

Now the village can boast not of numerous small industries, but of electric lights, both for dwellings and streets.

With good schools, industrious people and pleasant surroundings Churchtown is still on the map and may it remain so as long as the sun shines.

In closing I wish to thank the following gentlemen of Caernarvon for very material assistance rendered in securing for me information from old deeds and correct local history of the past days of Caernarvon: Messrs. John Z. Hertzler, W. J. McCaa, John H. Jacobs and Henry S. Martin, and to Mr. M. J. Weaver (surveyor), New Holland, Pa., for information concerning the titles to Spring Grove estate.

The librarian, Miss Bausman, presented the following report:

Diffenderffer; "The Founder's Return," from Wm. Riddle; "Legend of Wall Street," by Ezra Lamborn, "Practical Teacher," by Ezra Lamborn, from J. Aldus Herr; "Travels in Pennsylvania," by Gottlieb Mittenberger, from L. B. Herr.

The names of the following were proposed for membership: Hugh McAllister North, Jr., of Columbia; Dr. Martin Ringwalt, of Rohrerstown; Dr. Newton E. Bitzer, 236 West Chestnut street, Lancaster, Pa. .

Mrs. M. D. Owen Chahoon, of Washington, D. C., was elected to membership.

A letter from William Vincent Byars, of St. Louis, addressed to the Society, was read. It conveyed a word of congratulation on the excellent work our organization has been doing along historical lines, and holding us as a model which could be imitated in every county. Mr. Byars has been doing research work in Lancaster county, and he found our library of great assistance to him.

The paper of the evening was read by Dr. J. B. Lincoln, who had as his subject "The Story of Caernarvon." The essay was one of rare value from an historical standpoint, and it proved most entertaining. There was quite a discusison following the reading.

WINDOW TAX AND FRIES TREASON TRIAL.

More than fifty years before the treason trials growing out of the Christiana Riot, a notable case, involving the same high crime, arose among the Pennsylvania Germans in Bucks, Northampton and Berks counties. It originated in the opposition of this conservative class of citizens to the Federal law imposing a house tax. The character of the tax was scarcely more offensive than the prescribed methods of administering the law. That involved the appointment of assessors, who invaded the sacred homes of these peace-loving and domestic people, measured the doors and windows, and it was regarded and resented as a gross imposition. Moreover, the Pennsylvania-Germans of that section were intensely anti-Federal in their political feelings. A leader among them was John Fries, who organized hostile public meetings and made violent demonstrations and threatened to encourage armed resistance to the tax. He and his followers paraded the public highways, armed, and with banners and music, denouncing Congress and Government, brow-beating the tax officials and otherwise signally offending the powers at Washington. They had Fries and his followers arrested for treason, and Justice Ireland, of the Supreme Court of the United States, tried the cases. The first resulted in the finding of Fries guilty of treason. He was sentenced to be hanged, and, although he got a new trial, he was again tried, found guilty and sentenced to death. President John Adams pardoned him, because it was feared that his execution would create a physical and political revolution.

An echo of this trial has reached me in an interesting original document which I herewith submit and present to the Society. As in the Christiana Riot cases, the net of justice gathered in a great swarm of little fish, and many of Fries' neighbors were taken to Philadelphia, imprisoned, and, though finally acquitted, were subjected to expense, discomfort and even extreme hardship. Three of these from Macungie township, Northampton county, subsequently addressed this letter to the then President, Thomas Jefferson, from whose democracy they had hopes of obtaining relief. The paper itself was evidently sent, in the first instance, to Frederick Conrad, a member of Congress. He translated it and presented the original and translation to President Jefferson. The endorsement on the translation, "Kline-Sheaffer, Feb. 6/06, received Feb. 25," is in President Jefferson's own handwriting. The translation of the paper follows:

To His Excellency, Thomas Jefferson, President of the United States of North America.

We, the subscribing petitioners, humbly address you, in our own simple language with filial confidence, and relying upon your Paternal kindnesses to endeavor to excite you to interest yourself a little in our concerns in aiding us with your good offices, to recover the money back which we unjustly paid in the year 1800, in the City of Philadelphia. We must say unjustly, because I Jacob Klein (one of your petitioners) was imprisoned on a charge of high treason and not admitted to bail before trial, and when they could not convict me of that crime and condemn me to die they imprisoned me eight months longer on a charge of misdemeanor, and compelled me to pay a fine of One Hundred Dollars—so that my whole imprisonment was—twenty months, I believe the like never happened heretofore where a prisoner was tried in such a manner. We have sent a petition to Frederick Conrad, one of our representatives to lay before Congress in which the amount of the fine paid by each is inserted. We now put full confidence in you with a full persuasion and sincere belief that you will not withdraw your friendship.

Should these few simple lines create some commiseration with your worthy Sir; we shall feel ourselves happy well knowing the weight of but a single word from your Excellency.

Finally, wishing health and happiness to your Excellency, and that the Almighty may add many days of happiness and comfort to your life, is the ardent wish and prayer of your petitioners.

SIDELIGHTS ON AN EARLY POLITICAL CAMPAIGN

Among the most conspicuous names ever associated with our local politics were those of Muhlenberg, Cameron and Buchanan. In the earlier days of the province the Muhlenbergs were distinguished alike in letters, theology and public life. It will be remembered that one of this notable family, a Representative from Pennsylvania, was the first Speaker of the Federal House of Representatives. Of a later generation, Henry A. Muhlenberg was the nominee of the Democratic party for Governor in 1844. At that time, it is not so well remembered, Simon Cameron and James Buchanan were both supporters of the Democratic party, and they were both fully satisfied with the nomination of Muhlenberg—although both earlier and later they were seldom found in political harmony, whether belonging to the same party or not. Mr. Buchanan was a ready letter writer, and kept copies of nearly every important document he wrote, so that when his biographer came to write his life he had a great abundance of material; much responsibility attached to him for the proper care of it, and much labor was entailed by the necessity of going through it all. Simon Cameron, on the other hand, was extremely reticent with his pen. Like most men who avoid writing and do not talk unnecessarily, what he did write or speak was generally "to the point—pointy."

I happened recently to have the fortune to come across two letters written respectively by these two eminent men within four days of each other. They were both addressed to Muhlenberg, the Democratic candidate for Governor of Pennsylvania in 1844. Unfortunately for his party, for himself, and, no doubt, for the writers of these two letters, he died in the midst of his campaign. Had he lived he would have been elected undoubtedly to succeed Governor David R. Porter. Upon his death, Francis R. Shunk was nominated in his stead, and he was elected and resigned before his official term ended. What might have happened, how the course of Pennsylvania politics might have been changed, how Buchanan and Cameron might have stood together—or which, if either of them, would have been disappointed in Muhlenberg's administration—these and a hundred other doubts and conjectures are excited by the documents to which I have referred. Their local interest, as well as their general importance and personal references and disclosures, make them of very great interest, and I now place them at the service of this society.

Buchanan to Muhlenberg.

"My Dear Sir:

"I enclose you an invitation which I have just received for you from Mr. [George] Bancroft of Boston.

"You need not have made any apology for your delay in answering my letter. I sincerely pity you overrun as you must be with visitors & letters. A man must pay a very heavy tax to be a Governor of Pennsylvania, but the certain prospect of success must be a consolation to yourself as it is to your friends. I cannot undertake to express any decided opinion in regard to this county. If I were the event might prove that it was too favorable. I think, however, I may assure you that nearly all the old grumblers have ceased to complain. I now do not know a man amongst them in this city, with one exception, who will not vote for you. I have tried him hard, but as yet to no purpose. He is obstinate, but will not in any event aid the enemy. The majority against us will depend upon whether the Mennoists, Dunkers, &c., &c., can be excited to take an active part in the election. As yet all my information is that they have not been and cannot be thus excited. The leading Whigs here do not from what I can learn count upon Markle's election. If you can make any suggestion to me of when, where or how I can aid you it will afford me cordial pleasure to serve you in any manner.

"I expect to go to Bedford on Monday next. I would have been glad for your company, but I confess that your reasons for remaining at home are convincing.

"It is physically impossible for me to go to Wilkes-Barre, or rather to make a speech if I should be there. I have long neglected my teeth, and under the advice of Dr. Gardette have lost four of the front ones in the under jaw, which has affected my speech more than you can imagine. Until these are replaced I am hors du combat and this cannot be done until my gums are perfectly healed and sound.

"There is a glorious career before you should Providence spare your life and health. It will be in your power to elevate your own character and at the same time do more good to your native State than any other man living. You perhaps have no adequate idea of how low we stand in the estimation of our sister States. I took no part against J. M. P., except merely to vote in the negative, but I found that Senators from distant States were better acquainted with the history of our corruptions than those who have been in the midst of them. It would seem that the view was clearer from a distance. I have learned that the Governor is now putting all his machinery in motion to make himself U. S. Senator, and if he should succeed this will cap the climax of our disgrace.

"Please remember me in the kindest terms to Miss Rosa and the lieutenant, also to Mr. Barr, and believe me as ever to be sincerely and respectfully your friend

JAMES BUCHANAN.

Hon. Henry A. Muhlenberg.

Cameron to Muhlenberg.

"Middletown, July 22, 1844.

"My Dear Sir:

"The enclosed is from one of the Democratic Candidate for Congress. He is the shrewdest politician in this district and a man of fortune.

"Martin Coryell, the son of Lewis T., wants a letter from you recommending him for the post of Surveyor Genl. of Iowa, which he says is vacant.

"I am going to Northumberland on Thursday to attend their big meeting and will take a turn through Dauphin county. I am somewhat alarmed as to the vote of this county, for I have no faith in the friends of Shunk and very little in the integrity of Porter. Here the administration has some weight.

"From what I heard in the city I am afraid you have been given a wrong impression of my connection with the new paper. I only agreed to give my money to aid my friends with whom I have stood from the beginning of the contest for your nomination. (When Read called on me at Lancaster and talked of this affair. I told him candidly my position & agreed to give it up on condition that all my friends agreed). I had no desire or expectation of personal benefit from it & as little to get into the strife of a paper, but as a rule of my life I always stick to my friends with my purse and my person. When Read called on me &c (as above) agree, He previously telling me that he had consulted them, instead of carrying out this condition he started his paper without consulting them. Hearing this I refused to be connected with it and his paper died. It was a poor abortion and I should have been ashamed of its paternity. Like all such sickly, fatherless things it soon died without any one to mourn its loss. It seems that Read wanted to use my money and influence and at the same time avoid what he considered my unpopularity and that of my friends. I am tired of such slang. I do not choose to be used by any man who will not openly own his connection with me. I know well my own capacity for good or evil, & I feel deeply the indignities that have been heaped on my reputation by such men as I could name who have feared my rivalry, while they have at the same time been pretending friendship, using my services and in secret slandering me by inuendo. I have no desire for either office or political distinction and therefore such fellows may go to the Devil. A paper may yet be started if it be only to keep such rascals in awe.

"Of course, I write this without reference to you, for you are one of the few public men who have always treated me fairly, candidly & honorably & because you did so I have stuck by you for ten years without a fattening fee. I know that you have already been assailed in regard to me but I have too much confidence in your good sense and good heart to believe that you can be operated upon to the injury of any one who claims only your good opinion for his services. In the rest I can and will take care of myself.

"The Whigs are beginning to rally their friends for Markle, and they will make much greater effort than we had imagined in the hope of aiding Clay. I do not fear the result, but we must omit no effort in any quarter that will give us a vote. I wish you not merely elected, for that would be no great honor, but I want you to have such a majority as will be remembered with pride by coming generations of the Democracy. You can have such a vote if all your friends will cease dividing your patronage & go to work with their sleeves rolled up to make votes.

"Yours truly & respectfully

"SIMON CAMERON.

"Hon. H. A. Muhlenberg."

Minutes of the April Meeting.

Lancaster, Pa., April 3, 1914.

The regular monthly meeting of the Lancaster County Historical Society was held this evening in the society's rooms.

The meeting was called to order by the President, Mr. Steinman.

Miss Bausman gave a list of donations. A donation from Miss Mazie E. Smith had unusual interest and value. It consists, first, of a two-page letter from James Buchanan, before he became President, addressed to the then Mayor of Lancaster, Michael Carpenter, advising him of his intention to establish a permanent fund for the purchase of wood and coal for the needy widows and families of the city. It was a private letter, and has never been in print until to-day. The other gift from Miss Smith is the marriage docket of Michael Carpenter, who was the donor's grandfather, while Mayor and Alderman two generations ago. It records about 118 marriages at which he officiated, gives the names of the contracting parties, where the ceremony was performed, and the fees received for the same. Some were solemnized in his office, but most of them at the city hotels, Hubley's, Cooper's, the Grapes. Schofield's, Swope's, Reed's, Wright's and others. It may be of interest to the members to know the fees he received: 47 couples paid $5 each; 29, $2; 9, $2.50; 5, $1.50; 2, $3.50; 12, $1; 1, 75 cents; 1, 62½ cents; 1, 60 cents; 1, $4.85; 3, nothing at all, and one $10. The names of this ten-dollar pair were Thomas Woodward and Henrietta Lewis, and they came from Chester county. The first marriage recorded was February 28, 1843, and the last one on October 18, 1859. This gift exemplifies the fact that there are lying in many family chests and closets many valuable historical documents of which nothing is—and never may be—known.

Other donations received were as follows: The Pennsylvania Magazine for 1775, "I Am That I Am;" Wal-die's Select Library, 12 volumes; several old newspapers of Pennsylvania—1808 to 1838; Philadelphia Almanac, 1830; The Columbian Magazine for 1791; Treasury Book for the Lancaster County Silk-Growing Society, and other books from J. Lane Reed, of Dayton, Ohio, through Mrs. M. N. Robinson; Business Directory of Lancaster, 1887, from G. H. Rothermel.

The name of Dr. E. T. Prizer was proposed for membership.

H. M. North and Martin Ringwalt and Dr. Newton E. Bitzer were elected to membership.

A communication was received from Hon. T. L. Montgomery, who was made curator of the Historical Commission of Pennsylvania. In this communication he asked that the Historical Society lend their aid and co-operation in marking the historical places in commemorating the memory of prominent personages. It was moved and agreed that the communication be received for further consideration.

Three papers by Mr. Hensel were read. One on a Treason Trial against some Germans in Northampton County for resisting the Federal House Tax passed after the Revolutionary War, together with the original petition in German and the translation signed by three of the Northampton County Germans asking

Thomas Jefferson to get Congress to refund the money that they had to send to save themselves from being hanged for their resisting the house tax. On this translation there is a notation in the handwriting of Thomas Jefferson.

Mr. Hensel's second paper was read by D. B. Landis and it contained suggestions and plans, etc., concerning participating with the Shippen School in holding a pageant on Williamson Lawn on May 29.

Mr. Hensel's third paper was read by Dr. Lincoln and it was on the subject of Buchanan and Cameron concerning Dr. Muhlenberg's candidacy for Governor.

The thanks of the Society were voted to Mr. Hensel for the papers and were ordered printed.

History of the District Court of the City and County of Lancaster.

A history of the establishment and abolition of the District Court of the City and County of Lancaster may not be important to the present generation, and it is easily ascertained by any one who is willing to make diligent search. A resume of it may prove, however, not wholly uninteresting to the members of the Bar and to those of our citizens who delight in antiquarian research. It was the second Court of this character established in the State, the first one being in the county of Philadelphia. Therefore, to place the subject in concrete form for easy reference, I briefly sketch the substance of the acts of Assembly relating thereto.

The Act of March 27, 1820, P. L. 113, was entitled, "An Act to provide for the erection of an additional Court within the city and county of Lancaster." Section 1 provided "that there shall be a Court of Record established in and for the city and county of Lancaster by the name and style of 'The District Court for the City and County of Lancaster,' which shall consist of a president, who shall have power to try, hear and determine all civil pleas and actions, real, personal and mixed.....provided that the said Court shall have no jurisdiction, either originally or on appeal, except when the sum in controversy shall exceed three hundred dollars." By authority contained in Section 2, suits of this character might, within a stipulated time, be transferred at the election of either party from the Court of Common Pleas to the new Court. The Act was to remain in force for four years. By the Act of March 10, 1823, P. L. 66, the county of Dauphin was added to the District Court, and the President Judge was authorized to exercise such powers within the county of Dauphin as were granted to him in the city and county of Lancaster. The Act of 1820 was thereby continued in force for four years more from March 27, 1824, and the salary of the Judge was fixed at $1,600. The Act of April 10, 1826, P. L. 277, continued the Act of 1820, and certain supplements (so far as they related to the District Court or the City and County of Lancaster) in force until the first day of May, 1833, and declared that the Court should consist of two Judges, namely, the President and Assistant Judge. The Governor was directed to appoint and commission an Assistant Judge. The Court was to have no jurisdiction, except as to cases then pending therein, either original or on appeal, unless the sum involved exceeded $100, and suits in the Common Pleas, where the sum in controversy exceeded $200, were, after May 1, 1826, to be transferred to the District Court, and the original jurisdiction of the Common Pleas, where the amount exceeded $200, was to cease. By the seventh section of the Act, the county of York was annexed to the district, and thereafter the district was composed of the city and county of Lancaster, the county of Dauphin and the county of York. This situation continued until March 27, 1828, when the Act of March 10, 1823, expired of its own limitation. It was not renewed by subsequent legislation so far as Dauphin county was concerned; that county, after 1828, ceased to be part of the district.

By the Act of April 14, 1828, P. L. 446, the Judges were required to reside within the bounds of their district, and under certain other supplements the jurisdiction of the Court was enlarged, but not to an extent requiring special comment. By the Act of April 8, 1833, P. L. 215, the county of York was made a separate district, and the respective District Courts were continued in force until May 1, 1840. Under the Act of March 11, 1840, P. L. 122, the District Court of the City and County of Lancaster was re-established and continued for ten years from May 1, 1840, and by the Act of March 29, 1849, P. L. 256, the Court was abolished, and its records and business was transferred to the Court of Common Pleas.

SKETCHES OF THE JUDGES OF THE DISTRICT COURT, AND ALSO OF THE ASSOCIATE AND ADDITIONAL LAW
JUDGES OF THE SEC-
SYLVANIA.

Charles Smith.

The first Judge of this Court was Charles Smith. He was born in the City of Philadelphia on March 4, 1765. He was the son of William Smith, D. D., Provost of the College of Philadelphia. His early education was under the care of his father, and he afterwards graduated from Washington College, Maryland, on May 14, 1783. He studied law with his brother, William Moore Smith, who resided in Easton, and he was admitted to the Philadelphia Bar in June, 1786, and to practice before the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania on January 8, 1787. He began the practice of the law at Sunbury, and then coming to Lancaster, he was admitted there at the May term of 1787. He was a delegate to the Constitutional Convention of 1790, and was elected to the State House of Representatives from this county in 1806, 1807 and 1808. He was a member of the State Senate in 1816. On March 27, 1819, he was appointed President Judge of the Ninth Judicial District, then made up of the Counties of Adams, Cumberland and Franklin, as successor of Judge Hamilton, of Carlisle; but, nevertheless, he retained his residence in Lancaster. He served in this position until April 27, 1820. On April 28, 1820, he was commissioned President Judge of the District Court of the city and county of Lancaster, and he served as such until March 27, 1824, when the Act of March 10, 1823, went into effect, and Ebenezer G. Bradford was appointed under its provisions to the presidency of that Court. In disgust, he then sold his house and moved to Baltimore, Maryland. He ultimately returned to Philadelphia, where he died at Belmont on April 18, 1836. His body is interred in the graveyard of the Church of the Epiphany, in Philadelphia. He was appointed by the Legislature to revise the laws of the Commonwealth and to frame a new compilation of the same, and in 1810 there was published by John Bloren, under the authority of the State, four volumes known as "Smith's Laws on Pennsylvania." In 1812, volume 5 was issued, and in 1822 volumes 6 and 7. He also was the author of a treatise called "Land Laws of Pennsylvania."

He was married to Mary, daughter of Judge Jasper Yeates, and when he came to Lancaster, he purchased a tract of land east of the city, along the Conestoga River, and built "Hardwick," well known to our older citizens. This beautiful country seat afterwards came into the ownership of Captain James Wiley, and it was conveyed indirectly by him to the Pennsylvania Railroad Company in 1882, when what is now known as the "Cut-off" was constructed to the north of the city.

Alexander Thomson.

Alexander Thomson was born at Scotland, in Franklin county, on January 12, 1788. His parents died when he was young, and at the age of fifteen, he was apprenticed to his uncle, Andrew Thomson, to learn the trade of sicklemaking. While so engaged, he pursued his studies and acquired the rudiments of Greek and Latin. He afterwards taught school for three years in a select school in Northumberland, and then went to Bedford, where he took charge of an academy. While so engaged, he studied law with Judge James M. Riddle, who, after retirement from the Bench in 1804, practiced law in Chambersburg. In 1816, he was admitted to the Bedford County Bar. In 1823, he was elected to the State House of Representatives from Bedford county, and in 1824 he was a member of the Eighteenth Congress from the Thirteenth Congressional District of this State, composed of the counties of Bedford, Somerset and Cambria, as the successor of John Tod, resigned.

He was also a member of the Nineteenth Congress. He served in Congress until May 1, 1826, when he resigned. On that day, he was commissioned by Governor John Andrew Shulze, under the Act of April 10, 1826, Assistant Judge of the District Court of the city and county of Lancaster and the counties of Dauphin and York, and he continued to hold that office until June 25, 1827, when he resigned. On June 25, 1827, he was appointed and commissioned President Judge of the Sixteenth Judicial District, composed of the counties of Franklin, Bedford and Somerset, as the successor of John Tod, who was appointed a Justice of the Supreme Court. He then moved to Chambersburg, and lived there until his decease. In 1837, he opened a law school in Chambersburg, which was subsequently made the law department of Marshall College. This college was then located at Mercersburg, Franklin county. There were no formal lectures, the course being conducted by oral instruction and examinations. The law college was in a one-story building, adjoining his residence, on Main street, near the public square. After he left the Bench, he resumed the practice of the law, using this building also as his office. He was the last Judge appointed under the Constitution of 1790, and his commission expired, as provided for in the amendments of 1838, on June 30, 1841. His successor was Judge Jeremiah S. Black. The date of his admission to the Franklin county Bar cannot be ascertained, as the records were destroyed during the War of the Rebellion, when Chambersburg was burned by the Confederates under General McCausland. He died at Chambersburg on August 2, 1848, and was buried in the graveyard of the Falling Spring

Presbyterian Church, on the banks of the Conococheague. He was married on October 21, 1817, to Abigail Blythe, of Bedford county, and after her decease to Jane Graham. Frank Thom-san, a son of the first marriage was, on February 3, 1897, elected President of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, in which position he continued until his death.

Ebenezer Green Bradford.

Ebenezer Green Bradford was the son of Rev. Ebenezer Bradford and Elizabeth Green. He was a direct descendant of that William Bradford, who came over in the Mayflower and who became the Second Governor of the Plymouth Plantation. His father was ordained evangelist by the Presbytery of New York in 1775, and supplied the church at Danbury, Conn., from April 9, 1777, to November 22, 1779. On August 4, 1782, he was made pastor of a church at Rowley, Mass. The subject of this sketch was born at Danbury on February 19, 1777. He was educated at Dartmouth College, graduating in the class of 1796. I am not certain when or where he was first admitted to the Bar. He was, however, admitted at Philadelphia on March 1, 1802, and on February 14, 1814, at the first Court held at Mifflinburg, Union county, he, on motion of Enoch Smith, Esq., was sworn in as one of the attorneys. He was a member of the Northumberland county Bar, for he at one time resided in Sunbury, and he was appointed Deputy Attorney General for that county on January 19, 1809. He continued to hold that office until January, 1821. In December, 1822 he was a candidate for the State Senate from the Northumberland district, but was defeated by Lewis Dewart. On May 3, 1824, he was commissioned by Governor John Andrew Shulze, President Judge of the District Court, then composed of the city and county of Lancaster and the county of Dauphin, and on March 27, 1828, he was again commissioned to the same office by the same executive, the district being then the city and county of Lancaster and county of York. Under this second commission he remained in office until May 1, 1833, when the district was divided and each county became a separate district. His son, Rev. Arthur G. Bradford, was born in Reading, in 1810; but whether or not Judge Bradford lived there at the time, I am unable to ascertain. He lived in Sunbury until the Act of 1828 was passed, requiring Judges to reside in their respective districts, whereupon he moved to the borough of Columbia, in this county. After his term of office expired, he went to York. He died suddenly on May 17, 1836, in Pottsville, at Pennsylvania Hall, from an attack of apoplexy. The Miners' Journal, of that borough, in making mention of his demise, speaks of him as "Judge E. G. Bradford, of York," and states that his "remains were accompanied to the grave by a portion of his bereaved family and a numerous concourse of friends." Pennsylvania Hall, which was opened in 1831, is one of the leading hotels in Pottsville. Judge Bradford was interred in an old cemetery in Pottsville, wherein also was buried John Potts, the founder of that city. In 1895, this cemetery was appropriated by the school district, and his remains were then removed to the Presbyterian Cemetery, where they now lie. A flat tombstone contains the following inscription: "Sacred to the memory of Ebenezer Green Bradford, 17th May, 1836. Aged 59."

The assessment book of Norwegian township, Schuylkill county, shows: "Judge E. G. Bradford, 400 acres." This tract is supposed to be underlaid with coal and to be now of great value. In his lifetime he sold the one-half of it to one Martin Weaver for $9,250, and after his death a decree for specific performance of the contract was entered in the Orphans' Court of York county, and his administrators thereupon executed a deed for it. What became of the other half does not appear from the records of Schuylkill county. He left a widow, May Bradford, who lived with her two minor daughters, Sarah Ann and Emily, at Northumberland, and also four sons, who were then of age, namely, Rev. Arthur B., Albert G., Charles A. and Oscar. His widow and John Evans, of York, were his administrators.

Alexander Laws Hayes.

Alexander Laws Hayes was born in Kent county, in the State of Delaware, on March 7, 1793. After a preliminary education in Newark Academy he entered Dickinson College, at Carlisle, and graduated there in 1812. He then began the study of law in the office of Hon. H. M. Ridgely, of Dover, in the State of Delaware, and he was admitted to the Kent county Bar on November 15, 1815. In the meantime he, in 1814, served as clerk of the State Senate of Delaware, and in 1815 he was elected and served as clerk of the State House of Representatives. He practiced law in Dover until 1820, when he removed to Philadelphia, and he remained in that city for one year. From there he went to the city of Reading, in this State, and practiced his profession in Berks county for six years. During this period, namely, on April 19, 1824, he was, on motion of Molton C. Rogers, Esq., admitted to the Lancaster Bar. While living in Reading, he, under a special appointment of Attorney General Frederick Smith, served for three sessions as Deputy Attorney General in prosecuting the criminal pleas of this county.

By the Act of March 27, 1820, P. L. 113, "The District Court for the City and County of Lancaster" was established, and on June 25, 1827, Judge Hayes was appointed by Governor John Andrew Shulze Assistant Judge of that Court. By virtue of the Act of April 8, 1833, P. L., 215, it was provided that the several acts of Assembly then in force relative to the district Courts of the city and county of Lancaster and the county of York should be continued until the first day of May, 1840, but that, after the first day of May, 1833, the city and county of Lancaster should form a separate district, and the county of York should form a separate district, and that the Governor should appoint and commission a Judge of competent legal attainments for each district. In pursuance of this authority, and at the instance of the Bar of Lancaster county, Governor George Wolf, on May 1, 1833, commissioned Judge Hayes as President Judge of this Court, to serve until the first day of May, 1840. By the Act of March 11, 1840, P. L. 122, the Court was re-established for the term of ten years from May 1, 1840, and Judge Hayes was appointed and commissioned on May 1, 1840, by Governor David R. Porter, to serve for said term. He, however, resigned on January 1, 1849,

Under the act of April 13, 1854, P. L. 369, the Governor was directed to fill the vacancy then existing in the office of Associate Judge of the Court of Common Pleas of this district, by appointing thereto a competent person, learned in the law, to continue until the first Monday in December, 1854, and that, at the next general election, the electors of the county should elect such a person, "learned in the law," to be an Associate Judge of said Court, to hold office therein for ten years from the said first Monday in December. I can find no record that any appointment was made in the interim, but at the general election of 1854, Judge Hayes was elected Associate Judge, and on November 13, 1854, he was commissioned by Governor William Bigler for a term of ten years from the first Monday in December of that year. Under the act of March 25, 1864, P. L. 94, the Act of 1854 was continued for another period of ten years, with the like provision that "an Associate Law Judge" should be elected at the ensuing general election and he was, on the fall of 1864, again elected. He was commissioned by Governor Andrew G. Curtin on November 23, 1864, for a term of ten years from the succeeding first day of December. By virtue of the Schedule to the Constitution of 1873, his term was extended to the first Monday in January, 1875. The Constitution of 1873, abolished the office of Associate Judge in counties forming separate districts, and by the Act of April 9, 1874, P. L. 54, it was provided "that the qualified electors of.....the county of Lancaster, constituting the Second district....." should "at the next general election, in the manner prescribed by law for the election of President Judges, elect one person..... learned in the law, to serve as an additional Judge of the several Courts in.....said" district. In the fall of 1874 Judge Hayes, William Augustus Atlee and David W. Patterson became candidates for this office at the Republican primary election, and David W. Patterson was nominated by a plurality of 473 votes over Mr. Atlee, the next highest candidate, Judge Hayes than became an independent candidate at the general election, but was defeated. He then retired to private life and died in his home on South Prince street, this city, on July 13, 1875, at the venerable age of eighty-two. He lies buried in the graveyard adjoining St. James' Episcopal Church, in this city. He served longer than any Judge who ever occupied a judicial position in this county, namely, six and a-half years as Assistant Judge of the District Court, sixteen years as President Judge of that Court, and twenty years as Associate Law Judge of the Court of Common Pleas. His total service was forty-two and a-half years.

David Watson Patterson.

David Watson Patterson was born in Rapho township, this county, just outside the limits of the borough of Mt. Joy, on August 30, 1815. He was educated at Lititz, and also took a preparatory classical course at Moscow Academy, Chester county, and at the Old Milton Academy, Northumberland county. He entered Washington College (now Washington and Jefferson), and graduated there in 1839. He studied law under John R. Montgomery, Esq., and was admitted to the Bar of this county on June 20, 1842. In 1847 he was elected as a Whig to the State House of Representatives, serving one term, and in 1853 he was elected to the office of District Attorney, for a term of three years. He was active in the organization of the Republican party in 1856. In 1872, he was chosen a member of the Constitutional Convention, from the Ninth Senatorial District, and in the fall of 1874, was elected Additional Law Judge. The vote at the Republican primary was: David W. Patterson, 5,078; A. L. Hayes, 880; William Augustus Atlee, 4,605; and at the general election, David W. Patterson, 9,514; A. L. Hayes, 7,035. His commission, by Governor John F. Hartranft, was dated December 3, 1874, and was for ten years from the first Monday in January, 1875. In 1884, he was re-elected for another term of ten years, but he died on February 21, 1892 in the seventy-seventh year of his age. His remains lie buried in Lancaster Cemetery, in this city.

David McMullen.

David McMullen was born near Mount Hope, Lancaster county, on October 20, 1844. He was educated in the public schools, in Yeates Institute, in the Vermont Episcopal School at Burlington, Vt., and at the Millersville State Normal School, from which last-named institution he graduated in 1868. He first began the study of law under Hugh C. Graham, Esq., of Oil City, but afterwards entered the office of Samuel H. Reynolds, Esq., of Lancaster city. He was admitted to the Bar on December 23, 1871. He was elected to the office of School Director of the city of Lancaster in 1889, and he continued to serve as such until February 27, 1909. He was president of the School Board from November, 1890, to November, 1906. On March 2, 1892, he was appointed and commissioned by Governor Robert E. Pattison, Additional Law Judge, as the successor of David Watson Patterson, lately deceased, and he served in that office until the first Monday of January, 1893. Being a Democrat in politics, he was the candidate of that party for the office of Judge at the general election held in the fall of 1892, but he was defeated by Henry Clay Brubaker, the Republican candidate. After the expiration of his term of office, he resumed the practice of the law, and he continues at this time to follow his profession.

Henry Clay Brubaker.

Henry Clay Brubaker was born in West Earl township, Lancaster county, on March 5, 1843. When quite a young boy, his father moved to Lancaster city, and it was there that he lived during the greater portion of his life. He was educated in the public schools of the city, and subsequently attended Franklin and Marshall College, from which institution he graduated in 1864. After his graduation, he went to Cambridge in the State of Indiana, and he there studied law and was admitted to the Bar. He practiced in that State for a short time, and then returned to Lancaster to assist his father, who had been elected District Attorney of this county. On October 26, 1865, on motion of his father, George Brubaker, Esq., he was admitted to the Lancaster Bar. He was twice a candidate for nomination to the office of District Attorney, and once for that of City Solicitor, but each time he was defeated. In 1891, he became a candidate for Judge at the Republican primary election, against John B. Livingston, who was seeking a re-election. The contest was close, and, after a prolonged hearing before the Board of Return Judges, it was announced that he had eleven majority, excluding two of the wards of the city. The friends of Judge Livingston refused to abide by this result, and both of the candidates, and also Hugh M. North, Esq. as the nominee of the Democratic party, entered into the contest at the general election held in the fall of 1891. Judge Livingston was elected by a majority of 155 votes over Judge Brubaker, his nearest competitor. When Judge Patterson died on February 21, 1892, David McMullen was appointed Judge to serve until the first Monday in January ensuing. Judge Brubaker becoming a candidate at the Republican primary, he was nominated for Additional Law Judge by that party. At the general election of 1892, he was elected over Judge McMullen, and he took his seat on the first Monday in January, 1893, under a commission issued by Governor Robert E. Pattison, dated December 19, 1892. He died, after a comparatively short illness, on March 29, 1899. By his special directions, his body was cremated. On the death of Judge Brubaker, the writer of these sketches was appointed by Governor William A. Stone as his successor in office, and was commissioned April 11, 1899, to serve until the first Monday in January, 1900. Having been elected at the general election held in 1899, he was, on December 7, 1899, commissioned by the same Executive for a term of ten years, from the first Monday in January, 1900. Judge Livingston, however, having retired on February 13, 1904, he became President Judge, and Judge Hassler was thereupon appointed Additional Law Judge of the district.

Aaron Bilyeu Hassler.

Aaron Bilyeu Hassler was born at Centre Square, Montgomery county, on April 13, 1860. His father, a clergyman of the Lutheran Church, having moved to New Holland, in this county, his son was educated first in the public schools of that vicinity, and afterwards at Muhlenberg College, where he graduated in 1882. He read law with George Nauman, Esq., and was admitted to the Lancaster county Bar on June 5, 1885. He served for two years as solicitor for the Board of Prison Inspectors, and three and a-half years, from 1897, as County Solicitor. He resigned the latter office on May 17, 1901, to accept the office of County Controller, an office which, by force of the Constitution, was then established for the first time in this county. He served under this appointment until the first Monday in January, 1902. At the general election of 1901, he was elected for a full three-years' term. Upon the retirement of Judge Livingston, on February 13, 1904, the writer became President Judge, and on February 18, 1904, Judge Hassler was appointed and commissioned by Governor Samuel W. Pennypacker as Additional Law Judge, to serve until the first Monday in January, 1905. At the general election held in the fall of 1904, he was elected for a full term of ten years, and his commission, issued by Governor Pennypacker, bears date December 6, 1904. Ordinarily his term would expire on the first Monday in January, 1915; but, owing to the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution of the State at the general election held in 1913, it has been extended to the first Monday in January, 1916. He is now serving acceptably in his office.

The piece was taken from the port side (left) on Oct. 17, 1910, in the Burley or Staten Island ship-building yard, Mariners Harbor, S. I., N. Y., while I was there. It had been smashed in by the ice of the Arctic on the last eventful trip.

No. 2 is a piece of the banister of the house in which Robert Fulton lived, No. 1 State street, New York. In the basement and yard of it he built the first steamboat, "The Clermont," which was sailed on the Hudson, 1809, and celebrated in 1909 by the "Hudson-Fulton" parade. It is now being torn down.

No. 3 is a piece of wood from the old historical Astor House, Broadway, Vesey and Barclay streets, identified with New York history. It is nearly the last of New York's old hotels and is now being torn down.

Dr. E. T. Prizer was elected to membership and the following were proposed: A. M. Breneman, No. 213 West End avenue, Lancaster; Mrs. J. B. Lincoln, No. 603 West Chestnut street, Lancaster; J. Lane Reed, No. 531 Arcade, Dayton, Ohio; Mrs. Eugene F. Henry, No. 416 West Orange street, Lancaster.

A committee was also appointed to present to the State Historical Society a list of all the historical monuments and markers in Lancaster county, composed of Prof. H. H. Beck, A. K. Hostetter, Miss Martha Clark and Miss Lottie M. Bausman.

Hon. Charles I. Landis prepared the paper of the evening, his subject being, "History of the District Court of the City and County of Lancaster." He showed careful study and painstaking research into a very interesting subject. Mrs. A. K. Hostetter read the paper.

PREFACE

THE STORY OF A LETTER.

About a year or more ago, while coming from Philadelphia to Lancaster, I accidentally fell into the company of three gentlemen, one of whom was Eugene Snyder, Esq., of the city of Harrisburg. In the course of what to me at least was a very pleasant and interesting conversation, he remarked that he had a letter written from Carlisle by John Andre to his great grandfather, Eberhart Michael, who then lived in Lancaster, and that he thought the Lancaster County Historical Society ought to have it for preservation. I told him that I was a member of the Society, and that I knew they would greatly appreciate the gift, and he then said he would send it to me for that purpose. Time went on, and as I heard no more concerning it from Mr. Snyder, I concluded that perhaps he had made other plans, and, knowing the historical value of the letter, I did not deem it proper to suggest to him anything which might possibly not accord with his own wishes. However, recently, a member of the Lancaster Bar met Mr. Snyder at the funeral of the late Lyman D. Gilbert, Esq., who was one of the gentlemen present when the original conversation took place, and Mr. Snyder told him that he had the Andre letter, that he had promised me to give it to the Lancaster County Historical Society, and that he proposed to carry out such intention. I thereupon wrote to him, stating that I had not forgotten our talk about the letter, and that I was very glad that he still had it in remembrance, but that I deemed it indelicate even then to urge him to send it to me, and that only if according to his own good pleasure should he make the gift. If he concluded to do so, it would be received and greatly appreciated. In a few days, he sent me the letter, with a translation from the German, also a copy of the reply of Eberhart Michael, and a certificate of the authenticity of both. The high character of Mr. Snyder is a sufficient certificate, and none better could be furnished. I immediately handed over all these papers to Mr. Steinman, the President of your Society.

The letter, through much handling, was in pieces when received, but the whole letter was there, and, with the aid of Mr. Paul Heine, the pieces were placed in proper position. Through Dr. John W. Jordan, the services of one of the ladies connected with the Pennsylvania Historical Society were enlisted, and now the letter, but for the yellowness of age, is restored almost to the condition in which it was originally. The copy of the letter sent in reply by Eberhart Michael to Andre has also been translated by Mr. Heine, and both of the translations, together with the correspondence on the subject, is appended hereto.

LETTER OF EUGENE SNYDER, ESQ., TO CHARLES I. LANDIS.

HON. CHARLES I. LANDIS,

LANCASTER, PA.

Dear Sir:—

I here enclose to you, to be by you presented to the Lancaster, Pa., Historical Society, the autograph letter of Major John André of the 7th Regiment of Royal Fusileers, to my maternal great grandfather Eberhard Michael, with his reply. The letters have been in our family now for 138 years, and have been handled so often that they are in pieces. I also here inclose an abstract from our family record, showing my relationship to Eberhard Michael, and also communication from the War Department showing the Military service of Eberhard Michael, and also my request from the War Department for information, with the reply thereto.

I am

Very truly yours,
EUGENE SNYDER.

LETTER OF CHAS. I. LANDIS TO EUGENE SNYDER.

LANCASTER, PA., May 14, 1914.

My dear Mr. Snyder,

I have just received your kind letter of the 12th inst. with the enclosures therein contained, and I am already conferring with Mr. George Steinman, President of the Lancaster Co. Historical Society, concerning them. Until the Society can send a fitting acknowledgment for itself I in its behalf wish to express the grateful appreciation of all its members for your generous and invaluable gift.

I am with sincere regards,

To

EUGENE SNYDER, ESQ.,
HARRISBURG, PA.

Very truly yours,

CHAS. I. LANDIS.

LETTER OF CHAS. I. LANDIS TO GEORGE STEINMAN, ESQ., PRESIDENT OF THE LANCASTER COUNTY HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

LANCASTER, PA., May 20, 1914.

GEORGE STEINMAN, ESQ.,

President of the Lancaster County Historical Society.

My dear Sir:—

On behalf of Eugene Snyder, Esq., of the Dauphin County Bar, who resides in the city of Harrisburg, I present to your Society an original letter, written in German by Major, then Lieutenant, John Andre, of the Seventh Regiment of the Royal Fusileers. It was sent by Major Andre to Eberhart Michael, who was Mr. Snyder's great-grandfather. It has been in the possession of his family for 138 years. He sends with it a translation, a portion of his family record, and also a certificate as to its authenticity. A copy of the reply sent by Eberhart Michael is also enclosed.

Very truly yours,

CHAS. I. LANDIS.

MAJOR JOHN ANDRE'S GERMAN LETTER.

TRANSLATION OF A LETTER FROM MAJOR JOHN ANDRE (THEN LIEUTENANT ANDRE) TO EBERHART MICHAEL, OF
LANCASTER, PA.

Highly Respected Friend:

After you had made me so kind a promise when I left Lancaster, I expected to receive a few lines from you. We become easily impatient by waiting upon news we expect to be gratifying. I will, therefore, write the first letter, and although my language may be bad, it is German, because I am happy to express myself in a language in which I have engaged intercourse with so many honest and sensible men. Though I should prefer to be with you, I must say this is a fine country and the inhabitants show considerable respect towards me. We very seldom have conversation with them, because, generally, no good results from it; nothing but uncivil and hostile answers. We pass our time in making music, reading books, and await humbly our liberation, and upon more peaceable times. Myself and Mr. Despard are much engaged in playing duetts; he sends his best respects. If you see Mr. Wirtz, and Rev. Mr. Hellemuth, and H. Graff, please give my respects to them,—from the last mentioned, I have received the maps, and thank him. I am, with great respect, dear sir,

Your obedient servant,

JOHN ANDRE.

P. S. If you should see Mr. Slough, have the kindness to request him to write to me. His silence makes me at a loss about him.

CARLISLE, 10th April, 1776.

MR. EBERHART MICHAEL,
LANCASTER.

REPLY BY EBERHART MICHAEL TO
JOHN ANDRE.

LANCASTER, April 26, 1776.

Especially Highly Esteemed Sir:—

Your honored letter of the 10th of this month I have just now received and read the same with great pleasure. Your opinion (where you assert that you took the liberty of writing the first letter) will disappear when I tell you that already, on April 7th, I sent a letter to you with a man who (as he said) lived three miles from Carlisle and with his team passed there, and who promised me to deliver the letter to you personally. Nevertheless, how little may one depend upon such promises of people. The contents of the whole letter was nothing else but such expressions which honest friends at all times will make in high regards towards each other. They owe this to each other, having an absolute right thereto. The poor soul will profit little thereby, even if he opened the letter and withheld it from you. But just on this account is your letter to me so much more welcome, because this is convincing evidence that you did not wish to wait until I had earned something, but (if I dare say so) was paid in advance. What shall I now write? I know you are assured and convinced of my true sincerity and high esteem towards you. Nothing would please me more, if I had such talents, as to move you to read my letter with pleasure four or ten times. Nevertheless, in this case, you will find yourself disappointed. But what I fall short in this, such will be made up by my affection and high respect for you, and I know that you are kind enough to write the balance on my side.

It is with pleasure that I hear that you like so well Carlisle and its surroundings, and that the people act orderly and kindly towards you. Presumably the music suffers, and for this reason I would wish to be with you one half day a week. Perhaps it will please Heaven at some future time to arrange all national circumstances in such way that peace will again reign and inhabitants and soldiers will again enjoy brotherly association. These colonies and Great Britain,—a people mighty and famous in the world.

I extend my greetings to Mr. Despard. What you further command me to do in your letter, I will faithfully comply with. I have already written to Mr. Thomas in York, and enclosed for him the letter of Mr. Hillegas to me, and requested him to send same to C. Baily. Tell him I remain with due high regards of respect. Especially Highly Esteemed Sir,

Your obedient servant,

The members of this Society will recall that one of your distinguished fellows, some years ago, prepared and read before you an elaborate brochure on the life of Major John Andre (see Records of Lancaster County Historical Society, Volume 8, page 142). In that article, there will be found a description of his residence and imprisonment in the borough of Lancaster. It is for this reason that I will endeavor not to duplicate with any degree of elaboration what has been there so well reported. The reiteration of those facts may well be deemed a useless repetition, and your time and patience would be without compensating results. There are, however, I think, a few new facts that can be profitably added to the story, and some of the old ones arising in Andre's career, it seems to me, ought even to be restated in reviewing the above quoted letter, so that all the circumstances pertaining to it may, as far as possible, be made clear. I hope I may be pardoned for going over the same to the extent of introducing a connecting thread into the narrative.

It has not been determined with certainty whether John Andre was born in London or Southampton. The strong presumption, however, is that the former was his birthplace. Nor can there be found stated in the works of any of his biographers the day or the date of his birth. Some give the year of his birth as 1749, and others as 1752. Both these years, however, would seem to be erroneous; for, in a letter written by him to Miss Anna Seward, dated October 3, 1769, in speaking of himself, he says: "You must consider him as a poor novice of eighteen." From this, and the inscription on his monument in Westminster Abbey, where it is stated that he died on October 2, 1780, at the age of twenty-nine years, it would appear that he was born in 1751. It is certain that he had acquired a knowledge of the French, German and Italian languages, in some degree of perfection, and that he had attained a considerable degree of excellence in music, painting, drawing and dancing. His father came originally from Geneva, but was engaged at London in the Levant trade. At an early age, the son was sent to the University of Geneva, and, having been there for some time, was summoned home and assigned a place in his father's counting-house. In the early part of 1772, Andre went over to Germany, and did not return to England until the close of 1773. During this period, he visited most of the courts of Europe. His relation, Mr. John Andre, was established in business as a musical composer at Offenbach, and it is certain that, during this time, young Andre visited at his kinsman's house. From these facts, therefore, we may fairly conclude that he was able to read and write German with fluency.

After he gave up his business life, he purchased a commission as Lieutenant in the Seventh Royal Fusileers. This was as early as September 24, 1771. When his Regiment was sent to Canada, Andre did not accompany it. He first came in 1774 to Philadelphia, and journeyed from thence through New York and Boston, to join the Regiment. At that time, the Governor of Canada was Sir Guy Carleton. The entrance to Canada was by way of the Sorel, and the Seventh and Twenty-sixth Regiments were sent to defend that passage. In the fall of 1775, the American troops, under General Richard Montgomery, besieged St. John, at which post Andre was stationed. On November 2, 1775, the town was surrendered. Andre wrote to a friend at home: "I have been taken prisoner by the Americans and stripped of everything except the picture of Honora (Honora Sneyd) which I concealed in my mouth." The prisoners, about six hundred in number, were taken to Ticonderoga, and it was then ordered that the officers should continue their course to Connecticut, while the privates should be brought to Pennsylvania, where there were greater conveniences for their subsistence. General Schuyler, however, had promised the officers that they should not be separated from their men; and so, when the instructions of Congress reached the officer who was leading the prisoners to Connecticut by way of the Hudson River, they were not exactly obeyed, for all of the Seventh that were taken at St. John, officers as well as privates, were brought to Pennsylvania.

From the Hudson the course of the journey was through northern Jersey and thence by way of the Wind Gap or the Delaware Water Gap to Nazareth and Bethlehem in the Province of Pennsylvania. The Moravian Diary at Nazareth kept by the minister of that town, shows the following entry: "1775, Dec. 4. A strong column of Regulars, who had been made prisoners at the taking of Fort St. John, passed through on their way to Bethlehem, and quarters over night for a considerable number had to be provided here. They were so quiet and orderly, that we scarcely knew that there were soldiers in the place. Dec. 5. A still larger body of the same troops arrived and 20-30-40 were quartered at Several places here. Dec. 6, The first column left for Bethlehem yesterday morning, and the second early this morning, with their officers and the Provincial Commissioners, who lodged in our inn." The inn referred to was the "Rose Inn," a portion of which was standing a few years ago. The Diary of the Moravian Congregation at Bethlehem shows that on December 1, 1775, "arrived to-day some British Officers, taken prisoners at St. John en route to Philadelphia"; that on December 5, 1775, "Two hundred Royal troops taken at St. John arrived to-day," and that on December 6, 1775, "Two hundred Royal troops taken at St. John arrived to-day; quartered partly at the Sun Inn and the Crown Inn, and left next day." It also appears that they were followed on January 30, 1776, by many of their wives and children under guard, in four sleighs, and that as the cold was severe their distress awakened much compassion, and extra clothing, blankets, etc., were furnished. There is no evidence that these prisoners were actually taken to Philadelphia. On the contrary the records and newspapers fail to show that any of them reached that city. It would therefore seem that the statement that they were "en route to Philadelphia" was only surmise. By the State Archives it is shown that British prisoners of the same regiments were kept in Reading, and as those who came to Bethlehem left on December 7, and some of them, officers and men, arrived in Lancaster on December 9, it is a fair conclusion that the prisoners came to this town by the nearest route, which was of course through Reading. They were brought here in charge of Egbert Dumont. When they all arrived in this town there were eight officers, two hundred and forty-two privates, thirty women and thirty children.

For a time, Lieutenants Andre and Despard were boarded at a public house, kept by Martin Bartgis, which was located on the west side of South Queen Street, near what was then sometimes called "Court House Square." This house is now owned by Frank McGrann, and it is immediately south of the Conestoga Bank building. On May 13, 1773, Joseph Simons, who owned the Conestoga Bank property, and Martin Bartgis made an agreement for a five-foot alley way between their respective properties, and there it is to this day "plain for all folk to see." On September 4, 1787, Bartgis purchased at Sheriff's sale "The Indian Queen," which stood, as some of us remember, on East King Street, where the Eastern Market is located. Among the bills that were rendered for payment was one in Bartgis's favor "For £7 and 6s. for chamber, fire and lights supplied to Lieutenants Despard and Andre of the Seventh." These officers afterwards moved to a house on North Lime Street, then owned by Caleb Cope, but which subsequently was the property of the Hon. A. Herr Smith. Caleb Cope was a plasterer by occupation, and in 1774-5, was Burgess of the Borough. The officers were paroled to keep within six miles of their appointed residences, to approach no seaport, and to hold no correspondence on American affairs. Lieutenants Andre and Despard remained in Lancaster until March, 1776, when they were removed to Carlisle.

While at Carlisle, they occupied a stone house at the corner of South Hanover Street and Locust Alley. They were on a parole of honor of six miles, and were prohibited from going out of town except in military dress. It is said that, one day, Mrs. Ramsay, an unflinching Whig who lived across the street, detected two Tories in conversation with them. She immediately made known the circumstances to William Brown, Esq., one of the County Committee. The Tories were imprisoned, and upon their persons were discovered letters written in French. No one, however, could be found to read the letters, and their contents remained unknown. After this, Andre and Despard were not allowed to leave the town. They had secured fowling pieces of superior workmanship, but, on this account, being unable to use them, they broke them to pieces, declaring that "no d—— rebel should ever burn powder in them." During their confinement, one Thompson enlisted a company of militia in what is now Perry County, and marched them to Carlisle. Eager to make a display of his bravery and that of his recruits, he drew up his soldiers at night in front of the house where Andre and his companion lived, and swore that he would have their lives, because, as he alleged, Americans who were prisoners of war in the hands of the British were dying by starvation. By the importunities of Mrs. Ramsay, he was persuaded to desist. These officers were afterwards removed to York and they were exchanged some time in December, 1776. It was while Andre was in Carlisle that the letter which has occasioned this article was written.

ticity cannot be questioned, for it has come direct from Eberhart Michael, and has been in the families of his descendants for more than one hundred and thirty-eight years. It was given to Charles Albright Snyder by his mother, Catharine (Michael) Snyder, a daughter of Eberhart Michael. Charles Albright Snyder died in Harrisburg on November 8, 1868, and, before his death, he gave it to Eugene Snyder, Esq., his son. It is probably the only letter written by Major Andre in German which is at the present time in existence. Any one who has read the life of Andre knows that his talents were varied and exceptional. His social relations with the people of Lancaster has been to some extent set forth in his letters to Caleb Cope, published in Sargent's "Life of Andre," but additional light upon the same subject is here presented. The names of a number of persons are mentioned by him and by Mr. Michael in this correspondence, and I think that it will be somewhat enlightening to portray before the members of the Society, so far as I am able, who these gentlemen were.

Eberhart Michael, to whom this letter was sent, was born in Germany, on December 9, 1735. He was the son of Eberhart Michael, who died here on February 4, 1765. He was married to Mary Magdalena Henneberger, on October 24, 1764, by the Rev. Thomas Barton. Pursuant to the resolves of the Committee of Correspondence for the City and County of Philadelphia, a number of the inhabitants of the County of Lancaster met on July 9, 1774. George Ross, Esq., was in the chair, and Eberhart Michael acted as secretary. The meeting passed eleven resolutions, which are called "The Lancaster Resolves." On December 15, 1774, pursuant to notice duly given, the people of this county elected sixty persons for a committee to observe the conduct of all persons touching the association of the General Congress, and the Borough of Lancaster, which was in the first district, elected twelve members. Among these was the subject of this sketch.

He appears in the records to have been present at many of the meetings of the committee, and on April 27, 1775, two days after the news arrived that the Battle of Lexington had been fought, at a meeting of the committee "duly called" at Adam Reigart's tavern, "The Grape," "to consult and determine upon proper and necessary measures to be taken for the general good in the present alarming situation of affairs," he, in company with Edward Shippen, William Atlee, William Bausman, Charles Hall, William Patterson, Casper Shaffner, and Adam Reigart, attended. At a subsequent meeting, held May 1, 1775, at which he was also present, it was "Resolved that it is the unanimous opinion of this committee that it most heartily recommends to the inhabitants of the County of Lancaster immediately to associate and provide themselves with arms and ammunition, and learn the art of military discipline, to enable them to support and defend their just rights and privileges against all arbitrary and despotic invasions by any person or persons whatsoever."

He served in various capacities in the army almost to the date of his death. On August 14, 1776, he was a private in Captain Samuel Boyd's Company of the Flying Camp; on October 21, 1776, he was commissioned Paymaster of the German Battalion, Continental Troops, then commanded by Col. Baron Arendt. His name also appears, from October 4, 1776, to May 22, 1777, on the muster rolls of Captain Daniel Burkhart's Company of this Battalion. From August, 1777, he was on the pay roll of Captain Philip Graybill's Company, and the muster roll of March, 1778, shows him to have been a member of Captain George Hubley's Company. His name last appears on a general pay abstract covering a period from April 1 to May 1, 1778. He was also up to the time of his death one of the agents for the seizing of forfeited estates.

On July 9, 1768, he purchased from Magdalena Wettericken or Wedericken, what was known as "The Brew House." This property was transferred by him on January 4, 1771, to Philip Thomas. On March 12, 1778, it was transferred by Thomas to Charles Hamilton, and on November 25, 1782, by Hamilton to Mary Michael. The property was located at the southwest corner of South Duke and Mifflin Streets, in this city, and in it Franklin College was started.

Eberhart Michael died on July 16, 1778, and was buried in the German Lutheran graveyard, the officiating clergyman being the Rev. Mr. Helmuth. His holdings at the time of his death consisted solely of personal property, and by reason of the surrounding conditions they greatly depreciated in settlement of his estate.

The Mr. Despard mentioned in the Andre letter was Edward Marcus Despard. He was the youngest of six brothers, all of whom were in the British army, except the oldest. He was born in Queen County, Ireland, in 1751. He entered the army as an Ensign in the Thirtieth Regiment in 1766, and was promoted to a lieutenancy in 1772, when his Regiment was stationed in Jamaica. He showed a peculiar talent for engineering. He was afterward removed to Canada, and, as a Lieutenant of Captain Peter Dundee's Company of the Seventh Royal Fusileers' Regiment, was captured with Lieutenant Andre at St. John on November 2, 1775. He was brought with Andre to Lancaster on December 9, 1775, and they remained together in this town until March, 1776. They were both then removed to Carlisle. They remained at Carlisle until December, 1776, when they were taken to York, and shortly thereafter were exchanged.

After his exchange, he continued in service in this country until 1779. He was then sent to San Juan, and on his return he was made Captain of the Seventy-eighth Regiment. He was then moved to the West Indies, and he assisted in the taking from Spain of a portion of the Mosquito Coast. He also held a command in Honduras. For distinguished services, he was appointed Colonel of the Provincial forces, and was placed in charge of Yucatan. Here, complaint for misconduct was brought against him, and he was ordered to England, where, in the spring of 1798, he was imprisoned in Cold Bath Fields. As no formal accusation was, however, made against him, shortly thereafter, he was released. He was however again arrested in the autumn of that year, and he was then imprisoned at the House of Industry, until 1800. He became a soured and embittered man, and headed a conspiracy to murder the King and seize the Bank of England, the Tower and the Government. He was arrested and tried in 1803 for high treason, and, being convicted and sentenced to death, was, with nine of his associates, hung in London. It is a most remarkable coincidence that Andre and Despard, who lived together as officers on parole in this city, both went to their deaths in exactly the same way.

Mr. Wirtz, who is also mentioned in the letter, was Major Christian Wirtz. He was one time a tailor, but, on June 13, 1764, he purchased from Michael Ziegler the Black Horse Hotel, formerly located on North Queen Street, about where Reilly Bros. & Raub's hardware store now stands. He sold this property to Lawrence Herbert on November 22, 1777. In the Directory of 1781, he is set down as a shop keeper, but what merchandise he dealt in I do not know.

He was born in Germany about 1727-8. When he came to this country and to Lancaster, I cannot ascertain. He resided here until about the close of the Revolutionary War, when he moved to Philadelphia. In the minutes of the Supreme Executive Council of November 19, 1779, the entry appears: "Christian Wirtz of Lancaster produced a receipt for the sum of Fourteen Thousand Four Hundred Pounds, signed by Charles Wilson Peale, Agent; the same being in full consideration for a house and lott, situate on the southwesterly corner of Walnut and Front Streets (Philadelphia), containing in breadth, north and south, about nineteen feet, and extending east and west eighty feet, late belonging to David Sprout, seized and sold according to law. . . .” He was Treasurer of the County in 1770.

At a meeting of the Committee of Observation, held May 4, 1775, he agreed that the County should have his powder, being five quarter casks and some pounds loose, at a rate of £15 per cwt., they paying the carriage, and his lead, being about 150 pounds, at 45 pence per cwt.

A military convention, representing fifty-three Battalions of the Associators of Pennsylvania, met in this Borough on July 4, 1776, to choose two Brigadier Generals to command the Battalions. Col. George Ross was President and Col. David Clymer acted as Secretary. Christian Wirtz, as a private, was a delegate to this convention. General Daniel Roberdeau and General James Ewing were elected.

On January 6, 1777, Wirtz was appointed Town Major, for the purpose of guarding the prisoners in the Barracks, the ammunition and the stores in Lancaster, during the absence of the militia, and subsequently he was appointed by the Supreme Executive Council a Commissioner of Purchase for Lancaster County. On January 5, 1781, he was bound over before William Henry, one of the Justices, for refusing to take the State's money at the value of gold and silver, and he appears to have been suspended from his office, for on March 14, 1781, John Miller was appointed in his stead. It was charged that he cried down the State's money, “saying that it is good for nothing and will depreciate; that the price he gives for wheat is too little, that it will be dearer,” etc. What became of the charges, I cannot ascertain.

He was also a member of the First Battalion of the Flying Camp.

He died in Philadelphia, in the month of April, 1813, and he was buried from St. John's Lutheran Church in that city on April 8, 1813. He was twice married. The name of his first wife was Margaretha Houser, and of his second, Mary Wynkoop.

The Rev. Mr. Helmuth named therein was Rev. Justus Heinrich Christian Helmuth. He was born in Helmstaedt, in the Duchy of Brunswick, Germany, on May 16, 1745. His father died when he was yet a boy, and he immediately left home without the knowledge of any of his family. He was overtaken on the road by a nobleman, who, becoming interested in his artless replies, took him into his carriage, and afterwards sent him to Halle, to be educated. He was in his fourteenth year when he entered the Orphan House, and after having passed the prescribed course of study, he became a member of the University. In company with his friend, John I. Schmidt, he was sent to America as a missionary to the Germans, and in 1769, they landed in Philadelphia. Rev. Dr. H. M. Muhlenberg took Mr. Helmuth with him to Lancaster, and the latter preached his first sermon in Trinity Lutheran Church on the fifth Sunday after Easter, 1769. On May 1, 1769, he was called to the pastorate, and he continued pastor of the church until 1779. In 1774, he served three other congregations besides his own. He was, on May 25, 1779, chosen pastor of St. Michael's and Zion Churches, in Philadelphia, and, accepting the call, he removed to that city, where he remained in the service of those churches until 1820.

He was the author of several volumes of prose and verse, and, for a time, he edited the Evangelical Magazine. Among his publications was his "Brief Account of the Yellow Fever (1793)." In this epidemic, 625 of his congregation died, and he at that time spent a large part of his days in the graveyard, burying the dead, and, besides, held daily services in his church.

He was active in founding Franklin College, and appears as one of the petitioners for the charter of that institution. He was one of its first trustees. He afterwards became Professor of German and Oriental Languages in the University of Pennsylvania, and he served as such for eighteen years. When he accepted a professorship in the University, he was obliged to resign his trusteeship in Franklin College, as the charter of the latter did not permit any of its professors to be members of the Board of Trustees of any other institution. He died in Philadelphia on February 5, 1825, being almost eighty years old. He was buried in front of the cellar in St. Michael's Church, Fifth and Cherry Streets, in the city of Philadelphia, but when St. Michael's Church was torn down in 1874 his bones were removed and were reburied outside at the west end of Zion's Church on Franklin Street.

In July, 1771, during his pastorate, a subscription was opened for a new organ in Trinity Church, and the funds needed were successfully collected. A British officer, who was then a prisoner in Lancaster, thus describes it: "Largest pipe organ in America now in use in the Lutheran Church. Some of the officers went to see this wonderful piece of mechanism, and sent descriptions of it to their homes. Manufacturer had made every part of it with his own hands. It had not only every pipe and stop, but had some pipes of amazing circumference, to be played by the feet, in addition to the regular keys," etc.

H. Graff, mentioned in the letter, most likely stands for Hans Graff. There was no one of that name or that initial—at least of sufficient prominence to be inquired about,—living here in 1776, and, particularly, who would have maps to send to Andre. There were, however, here, two prominent men of the name of Graff, Andrew Graff and Sebastian Graff. They were the sons of Sebastian Graff, who was born at Offenheim, Germany, and died here about 1771. There was, also, an older brother, Matthias Graff, who does not appear to have been of any great importance, though he lived in Lancaster, and in 1777 was Assistant Burgess of the Borough. The original Graff, who came from Germantown to this county, was Hans Graff. He, however, died in 1746. George Graff who became President of the Farmers Bank, was born in 1757, and was then too young to have figured in this matter. As the Graffs were Germans, it is likely that one of them was nicknamed Hans Graff. Of course, this is only surmise.

Andrew Graff was born September 15, 1740. He, also, was a member of the Committee of Observation, and was Captain of a Company in the Revolutionary War, referred to as Captain Andrew Graff's Company. On March 5, 1787, he was commissioned as one of the Justices of the various Courts; but, with his colleagues, was, by the Act of April 13, 1791, passed in pursuance of the Constitution of 1790, legislated out of office. A President Judge and four Associate Judges were then appointed and commissioned to perform the duties of the former Justices, and William Augustus Atlee became President Judge, and his associates were Robert Coleman, John Whitehill, Frederick Kuhn and James Clemson. Andrew Graff was, however, commissioned as Associate Judge on September 13, 1792, and served in this office until January 5, 1811, when he resigned. He died suddenly on January 15, 1816, and is buried in the Moravian graveyard.

Sebastian Graff was a farmer, living in Lancaster Township. He owned large tracts of land immediately east of the then Borough of Lancaster, included in which was the old Ranck's Mill site, and he also owned the land in the Borough where the Lancaster Cemetery is located. He was born on March 22, 1744. He was active during those stirring times which immediately preceded and covered the beginning of the Revolutionary War. He was first elected to the Committee of Observation from Manheim Township (First District) on December 15, 1774, and his name appears at all of the meetings of that Committee, reported in the Archives of the State, up to November 9, 1775. He was mustered in at Philadelphia on July 16, 1776, as First Lieutenant of Captain Andrew Graff's Company. He was, in 1787, a delegate to the State Convention, which ratified the Federal Constitution, and was, also, in 1789, elected a member of the Convention, which framed the State Constitution of 1790. In the year 1790, with Michael Schmyser and Adam Hubley, Jr., he represented this county in the State Senate. He died on July 2, 1791, and was buried in the Moravian graveyard. Subsequently his remains were moved to the Lancaster Cemetery, where they now rest.

The Mr. Slough named in the postscript of the Andre letter was Col. Mathias Slough. He was the son of Johann Jacob Schlauch (Slough), who was born on August 15, 1708, and who married Ursula Elizabeth Steiner on January 2, 1733. The father died on May 24, 1750. Mathias Slough came to Lancaster with his father in 1747, but whether from Germany or some part of America I cannot ascertain. He was born on October 16, 1733. He married Mary, daughter of George Gibson. Jacob Slough, on March 6, 1747, purchased a lot, 64 ft. 4½ in. x 150 ft., located on the southeast corner of Penn Square and South Queen Street, and he there built the famous Swan Tavern, afterwards kept by the Hubleys. The will of Jacob Slough is dated September 20, 1749, and, though deposited in the Register's office on June 27, 1750, it was not proven until October 30, 1765. This fact shows that the statement that "he did not open the hotel until about 1754" is incorrect, for he was then dead. In his will, he devised to his son Mathias Slough, "The house and lot where I now live," subject to certain money charges in favor of his widow and daughters. When the father or the son commenced to keep the hotel cannot be now ascertained from the records of the Court of Quarter Sessions, as one of the books covering the earliest period is lost and the others are very imperfectly kept. The Governor, then, upon the recommendation of the Court, granted licenses, and there may be some records at Harrisburg upon the subject. Nor do the later records contain much accurate information.

They show that he was the holder of a license in 1761 and continued to hold one up to 1776, but from that time on nothing appears in any of the record books now at command. It is said in Ellis and Evans' History of Lancaster County, that he kept the stand until 1806.

The first public office which Mathias Slough held was that of Assistant Burgess. He served in this position from 1757 to 1761 inclusive. He was Coroner of the county from 1755 to 1768, and, as such, held the inquest on the Conestoga Indians, who were murdered by the Paxtang Boys on December 27, 1763. He was also County Treasurer from 1763 to 1769. He was elected a member of the Provincial Assembly in 1773 and 1774, and of the General Assembly, from this county, in 1780-83.

In pursuance of a letter received from the Committee of Correspondence of the City and County of Philadelphia, a meeting of the citizens of Lancaster County was called on June 15, 1774, to protest against the invasion of the rights of American citizens by the mother country. At this meeting, Edward Shippen, George Ross, Jasper Yeates, Mathias Slough, James Webb, Ludwig Lauman, William Bausman and Charles Hall were appointed a committee to correspond with the general committee at Philadelphia. He was present as one of the eight delegates from Lancaster County at a meeting of the deputies, chosen by the counties of the state, held at Philadelphia, on July 15, 1775. When the County Committee of Observation took an account, on May 4, 1775, of the amount of lead and powder available, he placed his stock, consisting of four quarter casks of powder, at the rate of £15 per cwt., and 200 pounds of lead, at 45 pence per lb., at its disposal. He, as an officer of the Seventh Lancaster County Battalion, was present at the meeting of the delegates representing the battalions for the purpose of electing Brigadier Generals. This has been fully referred to in another sketch. This and other meetings of like character were held at Slough's Hotel.

On May 2, 1777, thirteen persons were appointed by the War Office to supply the army with blankets, shoes and clothing. Col. Slough was one of the number. He was also one of a committee of twelve to take charge of Dr. John Kearsly and I. Brooks, who were arrested for "being concerned in and endeavor to procure British troops to invade Pennsylvania and the other colonies," etc. Andrew Graff was also on this committee. Nothing came of the proceeding, and one of the prisoners broke jail and escaped.

He was Colonel of the Seventh Battalion. It was one of the thirteen battalions raised in this county. It was ordered to Philadelphia in the summer of 1776. From thence, it was sent to join the Flying Camp, in New Jersey, and it appeared in the Camp on July 8, 1776. On August 27, 1776, he took part in the Battle of Long Island. The battalion completed its service and returned to Lancaster in the fall of that year, and it was then used in guarding the prisoners of war confined in Lancaster and Lebanon. On January 6, 1777, the State Council ordered the battalion to Philadelphia, and this about finished his military career.

When the first prisoners arrived from Canada, no provision had been made for their support. He, therefore, proposed to the committee that he would supply rations for them, and the offer was accepted. He furnished the necessary supplies, and was subsequently reimbursed by the government.

Col. Slough was one of the fifty-four charter members of the Lancaster Library Company, which was afterwards better known as the Juliana Library. In 1780, in company with others, he started an Academy in the borough, and on June 22, 1782, was elected one of its curators. He was also an early, if not a charter, member of the Union Fire Company. He was also one of the Commissioners named in the Act of Assembly to secure subscriptions for the Philadelphia and Lancaster Turnpike, the first turnpike built in the United States, and was afterwards one of the five superintendents who had in charge its construction. Subsequently, he became interested in stage lines, particularly the one from Lancaster to Philadelphia, which ran every Monday, Wednesday and Friday.

An incident of these early times appears in the Quarter Session Docket of November Sessions, 1756. It is there stated that Mathias Slough had an indentured servant named Michael Feeman, who ran away but was afterwards retaken. He therefore presented his petition to the Court asking that Feeman should be adjudged to serve him and his assigns for runaway time, and expenses to the amount of £18, 16 s., 6 d., whereupon the Court ordered that Feeman should serve two years over and above the term specified in the Indenture in consideration of "the loss of time, charges and expenses."

Col. Slough owned a large amount of real estate immediately east of the borough, and on February 26, 1799, he sold to the Directors of the Poor and House of Employment, for £3,129, 7, 16, a tract of land, containing 84 acres and 152 perches, most of which is yet owned by them. On this tract was built the stone building now used as the County Hospital. Slough's Mill stood to the east of the county land, on the site of the Old City Water Works. His daughter, Mary, was the third wife of Governor Simon Snyder. Another of his daughters, Fannie, was an accomplished pianist, and one of her favorite pieces was "The Rose Tree in Full Bloom." The first wife of the Governor was Elizabeth Michael, daughter of Eberhart Michael. During Col. Slough's later years, he moved to Harrisburg, where some of his children resided, and he died there on September 13, 1812. There is an entry on the records of Trinity Lutheran Church that he was buried in the English Cemetery. The English Cemetery of this town was St. James Episcopal Churchyard. It is however claimed by some persons that he was buried in Harrisburg and that there was a cemetery in that place known as the English Cemetery. As the proofs are not conclusive I do not pretend to definitely state the place of his burial. His financial operations were unfortunate, and it is said that when he died he was bankrupt.

A fuller account of this distinguished man than that which I now give was presented and read before you in 1901, and it is reported in Vol. 6 of the proceedings of this society, at page 139. Anyone, therefore, who desires more particular information concerning him is referred thereto.

Mr. Hillegas, who is mentioned in the letter of Eberhart Michael, was most likely Michael Hillegas. He was a son of Michael and Margaret Hillegas. His father was born in Alsace in 1696, and died in Philadelphia on October 30, 1749. The son was born in the city of Philadelphia on April 22, 1728, O. S. He, on May 10, 1753, married Henrietta Boude. He was a prominent merchant and a refiner of sugars, and he was also interested in the manufacture of iron.

In 1762, he was appointed one of the Commissioners to select a site and erect Fort Mifflin, and the following year he was elected to the Provincial Assembly, in which he continued to represent Philadelphia until 1775. In 1774, he was a member of the Committee of Observance for the City and County of Philadelphia, and in 1775 and 1776, he was a member of the Pennsylvania Committee of Safety. At a meeting held to consider the Boston Port Bill, he was named as one of the committee of forty-three. He was treasurer of the Committee of Safety. On July 21, 1775, Richard Bache, Stephen Paschall and Michael Hillegas were appointed to superintend the press and to have the oversight and care of printing bills of credit ordered to be struck off by Congress; and on July 29, 1775, he and George Clymer were appointed joint treasurers of the United Colonies by the Congress. Upon the death of Mr. Clymer, he became the sole treasurer, and, by election, from time to time, he continued in this office until 1789.

On April 2, 1791, the Assembly of this state resolved "That Michael Hillegas be requested and empowered to revise, compare, correct and publish, in one volume, the Resolves of the Committee of the late Province of Pennsylvania, with their instructions to their representatives, in Assembly held at Philadelphia, 15 July, 1774; the Proceedings of the Convention for the Province of Pennsylvania held at Philadelphia 23 January, 1775; the Proceedings of the Provincial Conference Committees held at Carpenter's Hall, in the City of Philadelphia, 18 June, 1776; the Declaration of Independence by the United States made 4 July, 1776; the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Convention of the State of Pennsylvania, held at Philadelphia, 15 July, 1776, with the Constitution; the Minutes of the Assemblies of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania to the end of the present year; and the Articles of Confederation of the United States of America." This volume in folio was published in 1782.

Mr. Hillegas was one of the original subscribers to the Bank of Pennsylvania, his subscription being four thousand pounds. He was also a member of the American Philosophical Society. In 1792, he was one of the Aldermen of the City of Philadelphia. On April 23, 1784, he was, in conjunction with Tenche Francis, appointed by the Supreme Executive Council, Commissioner to divide and sell the ground on which the Barracks in the Northern Liberties were built.

He died at Philadelphia on September 29, 1804, and his remains rest beside those of his wife, in Christ Church graveyard, Fifth and Arch Sts., Philadelphia. He had a son, Samuel Hillegas, whose name also appears in the old records.

Mr. Thomas, who is mentioned by Eberhart Michael was Ensign Robert Thomas. Where he was born and where he came from I have not up to this time been able to ascertain. He however entered the 26th Regiment of Foot in the British Colonial Service on March 2, 1770. He was stationed at St. John, and, with Andre, was captured by the American Forces on November 2, 1775. He was brought as a prisoner to Lancaster on December 11, 1775, and he was subsequently taken to York, where he was on parole. All of the persons named in these letters were friends in Lancaster. On December 8, 1776, he was exchanged for Pennsylvania "Muscateer," Ensign Michael App.

On October 31, 1776, he was promoted to a lieutenantcy in the 26th Regiment of Foot; and his name continues in the records of the British Army until 1779, when it disappears. Whether he was killed in battle, died from other causes or resigned I have not yet learned.

C. Baily, who is also mentioned by Eberhart Michael was Capt. James William Baillie. Eberhart Michael was apparently a little short of paper, as will be seen by the autograph copy of his letter to Andre. He therefore abbreviated, and the C. Baily stands for Captain Baily. James William Baillie entered the British Service on April 19, 1762, as a Lieutenant of the 7th Regiment. He was promoted to a Captaincy in this Regiment on June 3, 1774. He was at St. John, Canada, and was, upon its surrender, captured there. He was brought with other British officers, of whom Andre was one, to Lancaster, and was afterwards removed to Carlisle. The report of George Stevenson to the Council of Safety shows that he was in Carlisle on October 1, 1776. He was like all his fellow officers finally exchanged, but the exact date and for whom I cannot at this time say.

In 1781 he was appointed extra Major of Brigade, and on March 19, 1783, he was made full Major. From 1785 to 1792 he was Fort Major at Fort George, Inverness, Scotland. On September 1, 1790, he was appointed Lieutenant of the Invalids, and in 1802 Major of the 6th Regiment North British Garrison Battalion. His name appears on the rolls of the British Army until 1805, and it then disappears. When he was born and where, and when he died I cannot say. These facts might be ascertained in the British War Office, but my time has been too limited to make inquiry there.

And now my task has been completed. I have introduced you to every person named in both of these letters. The sketches are as complete as I at this time can make them. If the result is, that you have been entertained half as much in hearing the story, as I have been in gathering together the facts embraced therein, I am more than compensated for the labor thereby occasioned.

IN COMMAND AT VERA CRUZ, 1847-1848.

Colonel George Nauman, a native of Lancaster, served with distinction through the Mexican War. During the latter part of that conflict he was in command of the fortress of San Juan de Ulloa, at Vera Cruz, the "City of the True Cross," and, as that city occupies a prominent place in public view at the present day, it may be interesting to know how it appeared to an officer of the old army, and this paper is compiled from his letters, using his own words, so far as it is possible.

It never occurred to me, he writes, that I ever should be commandant of this great fortress, yet such is the fact. I did not wish to come here but I was told that although I might remain in the city of Vera Cruz in command of two companies for the present, in a short time I would be transferred to the castle. It is considered a much better position than the city, on account of its being much more healthy. It is, however, very isolated, and during northers is cut off from all intercourse whatever, either with the shore or the shipping. It is distant from Vera Cruz about half a mile. One of its greatest inconveniences is the vast number of visitors who resort to it in fair weather.

Our regiment marched from the City of Mexico as a part of the escort to the train. The march occupied us exactly fourteen days, and, although we had no rain, we occasionally suffered a great deal from cold and dust. At this season (December) it seems to me that there is no country as dusty as Mexico, and, although that part of it which we traversed lies entirely within the tropics, I do not think I ever suffered as much from the cold as I did on the day we marched from Tepe Aguateo to Perote. Soldiers and all rode, so that on the whole the march was a very easy one. One of the most unpleasant things connected with it was occasionally seeing a wagon loaded with the coffins containing the remains of officers who have perished in this infernal war. On one occasion I saw one capsize, and the coffins were strewed on the road. We brought with us thirty-six bodies, and I have in my charge eight that were brought down by the previous train, and many have been left behind in the region of their glory and their last agony. We brought with us the bodies of Captains Capron and Burke and Lieutenants Irons, Johnson and Hoffman. Our regiment has suffered severely. Five of our officers have been killed and four so desperately wounded that they have been compelled to leave the country. No regiment stands higher in the estimation of the army than the First Artillery for gallantry, distinguished courage and general good conduct. We are proud of belonging to it. I meet General Scott occasionally. He pats me on the back and calls me his "gallant friend."

The castle of San Juan de Ulloa is an exceedingly strong place. It has guns and munitions of war enough to set at defiance all the navies of the world. It has many mortars and howitzers of the largest size, and I never saw so large a pile of shot as may be seen in one part of the castle, all twenty-four-pound balls. The castle, as well as the town, had but little provision. But the town Vera Cruz is a walled city, and the castles, beautifully constructed as they are, offend the nostrils at every turn from their bad police.

I seldom go into town, unless I have business there, which is sometimes necessary on account of my being a kind of national jailer. Personally, I scarcely know what is going on in the town of Vera Cruz. It is a dirty, dissipated and disgusting place, containing as much iniquity as can be impressed into so small a place. I might reside there, if I chose, but I prefer being here, as I believe the castle is much the healthiest spot in this region, although its general fame is, in that respect, that it is no safer than any other place bereabouts. Clean as we keep it, I cannot conceive how it can be sickly.

It may interest you to know that my lieutenant is the son of Chief Justice Gibson, of Pennsylvania, and a nephew of General Gibson, Commissary General of the army.

The Mexican guerrillas are not quiet. Only yesterday a part of them killed a volunteer a short distance from Vera Cruz. Before we came to Mexico it was calculated that there were 3,000 assassinations per annum in the country. I wonder what the number is now? I verily believe that the low people of Mexico delight in murder for itself. I have asked a few of them who have rendered themselves notorious by the number of their victims if they felt no compunctions of conscience for their crimes, and they have uniformly told me that they did not, feeling, as they did, that they were justified by circumstances.

Gen. Scott is on his way home. He goes direct from here to New York, by sea. This will greatly disappoint the good people of New Orleans, Mobile and some other places, where the most extensive preparations have been made to receive him magnificently. I regret that he will not give the people the opportunity of manifesting in this way their admiration for his services and abilities, and their detestation of the harsh and unjust manner in which he has been treated. It is a great pity he is so irascible, and it is not especially creditable to his enemies that they have availed themselves of this weakness in him, and it is monstrous to see the "old lion" so goaded, and that, too, by persons of not one tithe his merit.

Commodore Perry is here, and I frequently see him. He is quite a rigid disciplinarian, and has tabooed his officers from all visits to the shore since the commencement of the sickly season, and the only place they are permitted to visit is this isolated and dungeon-like fortress. I see but little of them, for the heat is such in this region that at this season (May) people move about as little as possible, and the true art of preserving health here in hot weather is to agitate yourself as little, and to take as little exercise, as possible. The vomito prieto has begun its fearful ravages in the city. We are all anxious to get away. Let any one, unacclimated, be here at this season (July) and witness the frequent deaths from yellow fever and other diseases incident to the climate, and his nerves must be unusually strong if he can say truly that he is without apprehension of disease. I have lost a good many of my men within a month, and it grieves me sadly to see these poor fellows die so, most of them having been through all the battles of the valley. They have become perfectly panic-stricken, and are infinitely more afraid of yellow fever than they would be of battle.

One of the great reasons why everyone is so disgusted with Mexico, is the horribly degraded mental and moral and religious character of the people, and the almost total amalgamation of colors. I do not believe the sun shines upon a more wicked and depraved people. I am certain as a nation they cannot succeed, and that, before a great many years, they will be absorbed by our great Northern confederacy.

The heat here is such that the Mexicans call Vera Cruz "el infierno," but it deserves that appellation for other reasons besides that of being one of the hottest places in the world. At times it is almost impossible to walk across the parade grounds of the fortress. Even the natives say it is too hot.

It is interesting to see the troops that have latterly come down from the interior. At this awfully hot season, it may readily be imagined how ragged, dirty and worn they appear. The Germantown is the only armed vessel of any importance left in the harbor belonging to the United States. Nothing, on the whole, could have turned out better for the country than the Mexican War, and the evacuation is proceeding in the most satisfactory manner. We sail to-morrow, and then farewell to this rock of desolation.

MINUTES OF THE JUNE MEETING.

Lancaster, June 5, 1914.

The last meeting of the Lancaster County Historical Society before the summer vacation of two months was held this evening in the society's room in the public library building. The attendance was unusually large and those present had the pleasure of enjoying two most excellent papers.

The librarian, Miss Lottie M. Bausman, made the following report:

Bound Volumes—An Artilleryman's Diary, from Wisconsin History Commission; Report of the State Highway Department, Report of the Department of Mines, Report of the State Librarian and Report of the Auditor General, from the State Library, Harrisburg; Congressional Globe, 2 volumes, 1860–61, from Miss Ida Sprecher.

Magazines and Pamphlets—Vols. II, III, IV, V, VI of the Proceedings and Collections of the Wyoming Historical and Geological Society, from the Society; The Beginnings of Spanish Settlement in the El Paso District, from the University of California; The Pennsylvania Magazine, The Snyder County Historical Society Bulletin—3 numbers, Railway Statistics of the United States, 1913, Forty-second Annual Report of the Grand Rapids Public Library, Bulletin of the Grand Rapids Public Library, Bulletin of the Carnegie Library, Pittsburgh, Speech of Hon. Porter J. McCumber on Panama Canal Tolls.

Special Donations—"Paradise Hornet" from November, 1821, to November, 1823, three Lancaster almanacs of 1780, 1781 and 1782, some old manuscripts of the 1790–1800 period, containing the signatures of well-known residents of that time, all from Miss Jessie Warfel; a five dollar bill of the Farmers Bank of Lancaster, dated March 9, 1832, from Mr. E. H. Yundt, through Mrs. M. N. Robinson; "The Hive," 1797-1798, presented by Chas. L. Schaeffer (once belonging to John Schaeffer, of Baltimore, a brother of Judge E. Schaeffer, of Lancaster); a large number of miscellaneous historical pamphlets, from Miss Lillian Evans, Columbia; An Old Turnpike-Road, from Col. Samuel Wright, Columbia; two letters of James Buchanan written in 1828 and 1837 to William B. Fordney, from Thomas J. Fordney; a German newspaper published in Lancaster in 1820, from Thomas J. Fordney; Journal of the American Irish Historical Society, Vol. XII, Pamphlet of Irish Colonists in New York, from Michael J. O'Brien; Forges and Furnaces in the Province of Pennsylvania, from Mrs. J. B. Hutchinson, Philadelphia; Diary and Autobiography of William Michael, from Eugene Snyder, Esq., Harrisburg.

Thanks were extended to all the donors.

The following were proposed for membership: Dr. S. H. Dissler, Denver, Pa.; Arthur E. Campbell, 986 East Orange street, Lancaster, Pa.; Claude A. Villee, 738 South Queen street, Lancaster, Pa. They will be elected in September.

These persons were elected to membership: A. M. Brennan, 213 West End avenue, Lancaster, Pa.; Mrs. J. B. Lincoln, 603 West Chestnut street, Lancaster, Pa.; J. Lane Reed, 531 Arcade, Dayton, Ohio; Eugene F. Henry, 416 West Orange street.

Through Miss Emily R. Underhill, the principal, the Shippen School expressed its gratitude at the kind assistance given by the society in the successful presentation of the Lancaster County Pageant.

H. Frank Eshleman brought up the question of the advisability of holding another public meeting this fall, with the object of celebrating some important event in local history. He mentioned the fact that this year practically marked the two hundredth anniversary of the opening of the Conestoga Valley and no action was taken in the matter.

On motion of Rev. G. I. Browne a vote of thanks was extended Miss Bausman, the librarian, for the excellent work she has been doing in looking after and caring for the library.

Two very entertaining and very valuable papers were read:

The first was a lengthy article read by his honor, Judge Chas. I. Landis, the subject being a long and interesting letter written by Major John Andre, the British officer who took part in Arnold's treason, and was hanged for it. The letter was written from Carlisle, Pa., where Andre was a prisoner, on parole, to Eberhard Michael, a prominent citizen of Lancaster, with whom Andre was on terms of intimate friendship while a prisoner in this city. The letter was in the German language, of which Andre was a master, as well as of the French and Italian languages. In addition to the letter, sketches of more than half a dozen prominent men were given, who were alluded to in Andre's letter. The whole formed one of the most entertaining papers ever read before the society.

The second paper was by Mrs. Mary N. Robinson, whose well-known literary skill was displayed to fine advantage, in presenting the contents of a series of letters written by her father, Colonel Nauman, who was in command of the castle of San Juan de Ulloa, and the city of Vera Cruz, during the period of the United States' occupation, in 1847-1848. Col. Nauman's letters were written to his wife here in Lancaster and with the easy familiarity of private correspondence, enter into what he saw and underwent in the "City of the True Cross," in a most entertaining manner.

MASSACRE OF THE CONES- TOGA INDIANS, 1763. INCIDENTS AND DETAILS.

The events which preceded the massacre of the Conestoga Indians, the French and Indian war, followed by Pontiac's war, and the plundering and murdering of defenseless families of the frontier settlements, tended to accentuate the feeling of fear and distrust which the white inhabitants held against the uncivilized and treacherous Redskins.

The building of the frontier forts and blockhouses by the Government, which also maintained a number of provincial troops, and the forming of ranging companies in the most thickly populated districts, did not stop the Indian depredations. Many of the Indians living among the white settlers in the eastern section of Pennsylvania had become civilized, or partly so, and by 1763 the Conestoga Indians, or the small part left of that once hostile tribe, were considered friendly and harmless. In fact, the Conestogas are quoted as friendly much earlier than this date. Rev. M. H. Stine in his book, "Baron Stiegel," tells how the Baron and his friend took with them from Lancaster, when on a tour of exploration of this county, an extra guide, a trusty Indian "belonging to the Conestogas," and reference is made later of a warning given by a friendly Indian, a "member of the Conestoga tribe"

It was, however, the marauding bands of hostile Indians from the West pressing into the more thickly-settled and better-cultivated sections of the East that caused such terror among the white inhabitants, and naturally made them feel that their near neighbors, the friendly Indians, might turn once more to the side of their hostile brethren. Report, whether true or false, had set on foot many tales to this effect.

In the month of October, 1763, in Northampton county, occurred a forerunner of the trouble to follow later in our own county. The Indians in the East were living under the protection of the Government, yet it was the Government's own soldiers, commanded by Captain Jacob Wetterhold, who murdered a number of harmless Indians at the end of a drunken debauch. This, of course, roused the other Indians to vengeance, and one affair followed another, until, in November, the Indians from that section were taken to Philadelphia and placed on Province Island, in the Delaware river, for safety. The above, with many details, will be found in the "Life and Times of David Zeisberger," by Edmund De Schweinitz.

In Cumberland county people were fleeing to Carlisle and the banks of the Susquehanna river. In our own county, more especially the sections which are no longer included within its borders—Dauphin and Lebanon counties—murders were numerous, and, while many facts concerning them are given in the histories of the county, much occurred that was never known. The picture presented to us of the desperation and stress in which the people of 1763, ancestors of some of us, were living has possibly not been drawn with sufficient darkness.

John Penn, the new Governor, had been in the province only a month when the Conestoga Indians sent a letter to him, dated November 30, 1763 (see Colonial Records, Volume IX) which contained a welcome, also a request. Being without forest lands in which to hunt, they asked for provisions and clothing, and complained that their neighbors were using land allotted them for their use to cultivate crops for themselves. This letter reached Governor Penn December 19, 1763, five days after six of their number had been killed and the spot which had been the setting for many a picturesque gathering was marked with only a heap of ashes.

To the Indian town in the Manor of Conestoga came at various times Governors to meet Indian chiefs, hold councils and make treaties. The Governors—Gookin, Kelth and Gordon—were always accompanied by a number of men—once thirty, another time seventy, and usually several men of prominence in Indian affairs from Philadelphia or our own vicinity. The Indian chiefs, also, had their followers in attendance, so that the provincial representatives on one side and the Indian contingent on the other side formed a group of men unusual as well as important.

And to this spot on the 14th of December, 1763, came the men from Paxton. The dreadful conditions throughout the province had caused them to consider all Indians alike, and with them on their journey to Conestoga they carried but one thought, that of extermination.

Thwarted in that, owing to the absence of a number of the Indians, but deviating in no way from their purpose, their mission of destruction was doomed to have a second chapter. Governor Penn was notified as soon as possible, a matter of two or three days, for overhead wires, surface rails, or even good roads, were not seen in Lancaster county in 1763, of the unfortunate affair at Conestoga, and immediately issued the following proclamation:

"By the Honorable John Penn, Esquire; Lieutenant Governor and Commander-in-Chief of the Province of Pennsylvania and counties of New-Castle, Kent and Sussex on Delaware.

A PROCLAMATION.

"Whereas, I have received Information, That, on Wednesday, the 14th Day of this Month, a Number of People armed and mounted on horseback, unlawfully assembled together, and went to the Indian Town, in the Conestoga Mannor, in Lancaster county, and without the least Reason or Provocation, in cool blood, barbarously killed Six of the Indians settled there, and burnt and destroyed all their Houses and Effects; And, Whereas so cruel and inhuman an Act, committed in the heart of this Province on the said Indians, who have lived peacefully and inoffensively among us, during our late Troubles, and for many years before, and were justly considered as under the protection of this Government and its Laws, calls loudly for the vigorous exertion of the Civil Authority, to detect the Offenders, and bring them to condign Punishment; I Have Therefore, by and with the Advice and Consent of the Council, thought fit to issue this Proclamation, and do hereby strictly charge and enjoin all Judges, Justices, Sheriffs, Constables, Officers Civil and Military, and all other his Majesty's Liege Subjects within this Province, to make diligent Search and Enquiry after the Authors and Perpetrators of the said crime, their Abettors and Accomplices, and to use all possible means to apprehend and secure them in some of the public Goals of this Province, that they may be brought to their Trials, and be proceeded against according to law. And, whereas, a number of other Indians, who lately lived on or near the Frontiers of this Province, being willing and desirous to preserve and continue the ancient Friendship, which, therefore, subsisted between them and the good People of the Province, have, at their own earnest Request, been removed from their Habitations, and brought into the county of Philadelphia, and seated for the Present for their better security on the Province Island, and, in other Places in the Neighborhood of the City of Philadelphia, where Provision is made for them at the public expense. I do, therefore, hereby strictly forbid all Persons whatsoever, to molest or injure any of the said Indians, as they will answer the contrary at their Peril.

"Given under my Hand, and the Great Seal of the said Province, at Philadelphia, the Twenty-second Day of December, Anno Domini One Thousand Seven Hundred and Sixty-three, and in the Fourth Year of His Majesty's Reign.

"JOHN PENN.

"By His Honor's Command, Joseph Shippen, jun., Secretary—God Save the King."

This proclamation, as just noted, was issued December 22d, but did not appear in print until Thursday, December 29th, in the two Philadelphia papers of that day, The Pennsylvania Journal and The Pennsylvania Gazette—owing to the fact that they were issued but once a week. Copies of these papers can be seen at the library of the Historical Society of Pennsylvania, at Philadelphia. This same proclamation appears in Colonial Records, Volume IX.

Before this proclamation was handed to the public on December 29th the second chapter of the tragedy had occurred. On the day the Indian town was destroyed and the six Indians murdered, four of those absent at the time either came or were brought to Lancaster. They were taken to the work-house, which stood at the corner of West King and Prince streets, adjoining the jail to the north, by Robert Thompson and Adam Simon Kuhn, and, as the jailor has written it, were "given into my care."

The other ten did not seek safety in the work-house until December 17th, when placed there by John Hay, the Sheriff of the county, with instructions for care and ample provisions. This was but a temporary procedure, some authorities say preparatory to taking them to Philadelphia and putting them on Province Island, where those from Northampton county had been for some time. Before the civil authorities of the county had time to take action as to the future of their charges the "Paxton Boys" came down and completed what they had begun at Conestoga. They started for Lancaster on December 26th; did they know of the proclamation issued on December 22d? Nothing, evidently, had turned them from their purpose for when they entered the town on December 27, 1763, it was with the precision and directness of a set purpose, went quickly to the place that housed their victims, used violence to gain entrance, and then "shot, scalped, hacked and cut to pieces," as William Henry described it, the last collective body of the original inhabitants of the county of Lancaster when a wilderness. They took away the Indians, but left us the name Conestoga. The description of the massacre can best be told as William Henry, a resident of Lancaster and an eye-witness, detailed it in a letter to a friend. See Heckewelder's Narrative, pages 78, 79, 80: "There are few, if any, murders to be compared with the cruel murder committed on the Conestoga Indians in the gaol of Lancaster in 1763, by the Paxton Boys (as they were then called). From fifteen to twenty Indians, as report stated, were placed there for protection. A regiment of Highlanders were at the time quartered at the barracks in the town, and yet these murderers were permitted to break open the doors of the city gaol and commit the horrid deed. The first notice I had of this affair was that while at my father's store, near the court house, I saw a number of people running down street toward the gaol, which enticed me and other lads to follow them. At about sixty or eighty yards from the gaol we met from twenty-five to thirty men, well mounted on horses, and with rifles, tomahawks, and scalping knives, equipped for murder. I ran into the prison yard, and there, O what a horrid sight presented itself to my view! Near the back door of the prison, lay an old Indian and his squaw (wife), practically well known and esteemed by the people of the town, on account of his placid and friendly conduct.

His name was Will Sock; across him and his squaw lay two children, of about the age of three years, whose heads were split with the tomahawk, and their scalps all taken off. Toward the middle of the gaol yard, along the west side of the wall, lay a stout Indian, whom I particularly noticed to have been shot in the breast, his legs were chopped with the tomahawk, his hands cut off, and finally a rifle ball discharged in his mouth; so that his head was blown to atoms, and the brains were splashed against, and yet hanging to the wall, for three or four feet around. This man's hands and feet had also been chopped off with a tomahawk. In this manner lay the whole of them, men, women and children, spread about the prison yard: shot, scalped, hacked and cut to pieces."

After receiving the news of the massacre and recognizing, undoubtedly, the disregard with which his first proclamation had been received the Governor issued a second one. This one was dated January 2, 1764, but came to the public by way of the newspapers on January 5th, also appearing in the issues of the following week, January 12th.

The second proclamation reads:

By the Honorable John Penn, Esquire; Lieutenant Governor and Commander-in-Chief of the Province of Pennsylvania, and Counties of New-Castle, Kent and Sussex on Delaware.

A PROCLAMATION.

Whereas, on the Twenty-second Day of December last I issued a Proclamation, for the apprehending and bringing to Justice a Number of Persons, who, in violation of the public

Faith, and in Defiance of all Law, had inhumanly killed Six of the Indians, who had lived on Conestogue Manor, for the course of many years, peaceably and inoffensively, under the Protection of this Government, on Lands assigned to them for their Habitation; Notwithstanding which, I have received Information, that on the Twenty-seventh of the same month, a large Party of armed Men again assembled and met together, in a riotous and tumultuous Manner, in the County of Lancaster, and proceeded to the Town of Lancaster, where they violently broke open the Work-house, and butchered and put to Death Fourteen of the said Conestogue Indians, Men, Women and Children, who had been taken under the immediate Care and Protection of the Magistrates of said County, and lodged, for their better Security, in the said Work-house, till they should be more effectually provided for, by Order of the Government: And Whereas common Justice loudly demands, and the Laws of the Land (upon the Preservation of which not only the Liberty and Security of every Individual. but the Being of the Government itself depend) require, that the above Offenders should be brought to condign Punishment; I Have Therefore, by and with the advice of the Council, published this Proclamation, and do hereby strictly charge and command all Judges, Justices, Sheriffs, Constables, Officers Civil and Military, and all other His Majesty's faithful and liege Subjects within this Province, to make diligent search and inquiry after the Authors and Perpetrators of the said last mentioned Offense, their Abettors and Accomplices; and that they use all possible Means to apprehend and secure them, in some of the public Goals of this Province, to be dealt with according to law. And I do hereby further promise and engage, That any Person or Persons, who shall apprehend and secure, or cause to be apprehended and secured, any Three of the Ringleaders of the said Party and prosecute them to conviction, shall have and receive for each the public Reward of Two Hundred Pounds; and any accomplice, not concerned in the immediate shedding the Blood of the said Indians, who shall make Discovery of any or either of the said Ringleaders, and apprehend and prosecute them to Conviction, shall, over and above the said Reward, have all the weight and influence of the Government, for obtaining his Majesty's Pardon for his Offence.

Given under my Hand and the Great Seal of the said Province at Philadelphia, the Second Day of January, Anno Domino One Thousand Seven Hundred and Sixty-four, and in the Fourth Year of his Majesty's Reign

JOHN PENN.

By his Honor's Command, Joseph Shippen, Jun., Secretary

"GOD SAVE THE KING."

This second proclamation had as little weight with the inhabitants of Lancaster county as the first one had. Even the generous reward offered was no temptation to assist in bringing to justice the men who dared defy the commands of the Government. Public opinion held sway and out-did the law in this one case, at least, for the "Paxton Boys" went about the country as usual, unapprehended. A weak attempt was made to put Lazarus Stewart in the hands of the law, but nothing materialized from the effort.

In the meanwhile, Felix Donnally, the jailer, in whose care the murdered Indians had been, presents a bill to the county for their keep during the time they had been in the work-house. The original paper is the property of the Ridgeway Branch of the Library Company, of Philadelphia and part of the John A. McAlister collection of manuscripts. On the outside of the paper is "Felix Donnally: Acco:—for maintaining the Indians at Lancaster." On the other side, the bill itself reads as follows:

"John Hay Esquire high Sheriff of Lancaster County to Felix Donnally Dr.

"For the Diet and Maintenance of 14 Indians which belong to the Conestogue Town in the said county and committed to the care of the said Felix Donnally, Viz:

This paper is well preserved considering its age, as will be seen from the fac-simile obtained for this society through the courtesy of the library mentioned.

After the massacre much was said and nothing done, as often happens in other cases. You have seen the references to numerous pamphlets printed, some sustaining the action of the "Paxton Boys," others arguing against such lawlessness. Most of these pamphlets can be seen at the Ridgeway Branch of the Library Company of Philadelphia. An extract from "Plain Truth," a pamphlet printed in Philadelphia by Andrew Stewart—1764—is a good example of what appeared for the defense:

"First, then, Let us consider the Paxton Volunteers, and others, against whom some make such an Outcry;— Shall we attempt to vindicate their Killing Indians under the Protection of the Government? By no means. The Fact is to be condemned as unlawful; but though we would not vindicate their conduct in every Respect, is it not the Duty of every good Man impartially to consider what have been the circumstances of those people, and what they suffered to provoke them to this desperate and unlawful Act? Would not this course discover more of that meek and Christian Spirit, which some People so much profess, but so little exercise?(Referring to the Quakers.)

These Incendiaries are not only enraged themselves, at their dear friends, the Indians, being slain, but would have all the Rest of the World of their Temper;—To obtain which End, they have wrote and published several inflammatory Pamphlets, asserting many falsehoods, with a Design to enrage the Populace against these poor, distressed, though rash People.—Go but into the House of a Quaker, and before you have Time to discover what you came for, he will ask you, with an effected Meekness, “Hast thee seen the Massacre of the Indians at Lancaster’” A Pamphlet well known to be wrote by one of their zealous Friends, in Order to swell the Current of Prejudices against the aforesaid People. I should be glad to see the Massacre of the Back Inhabitants drawn by the same able Hand, provided he would do it with the same Zeal in their Favour and against the Savage Indian Butchers, as I’m confident he could have a much more affecting Subject to handle, and fill every Imagination with Horror.—None of those killed at Lancaster were by Design kept one Moment in Torment; whereas many of our Frontier Inhabitants have been wantonly kept whole Days and Nights in exquisite Tortures, prolonged and heightened with all the contrivances infernal Malice could suggest before those Savages (whose Cause and Interest Quakers so warmly espoused) would vouchsafe to give the merciful finishing Blow.

In another pamphlet entitled “The Conduct of The Paxton-Men, Impartially represented:—In a Letter From a Gentleman in one of the Back-Countries, to a Friend in Philadelphia. Philadelphia: Printed by A. Stewart, and Sold by John Creaig, Shop-keeper in Lancaster 1764, our former townsman, the Reverend Thomas Barton, who was the author of the letter, seemed to regard the killing of the Indians as a danger removed rather than an unpardonable offense against the Government and a crime against humanity. In his letter he says: "A mighty Noise and Hubbub has been made about killing a few Indians in Lancaster-County and even Philosophers and Legislators have employed to raise the Holloo upon those that killed them; and to ransack Tomes and Systems, Writers ancient and modern, for Proofs of their Guilt and Condemnation! And what have they proved at last? Why, that the White Savages of Paxton and Donnegall have violated the Laws of hospitality!.....Now I have been frequently informed, for many years, by sundry of their nearest neighbors in the Conestogoe Mannor, that they were a drunken, debauched, insolent, quarrelsome crew; and that ever since the Commencement of the War. they have been a Trouble and Terror to all around them—as for Will Soc and his Brother, I am told there are undoubted Proofs of the Guilt and Treachery—That they have threatened and drawn their Knives upon People who have refused to comply with their demands, is a Fact well known to hundreds. The Public are also informed that "The Magistrates of Lancaster sent to collect the remaining Indians,—brought them into Town, comforted and promised them Protection."—If they did this, they must be very silly, indeed. For how was it possible for Men destitute of a Militia, without Men, Arms or Ammunition to protect them? But I am credibly informed that the Truth of the Matter was That these Magistrates, being apprehensive of the Danger of the Indians, were very desirous to have them removed immediately to Philadelphia as a place of greater Security,—through which neglect to remove thither they must have lost their Lives, and not through any Misconduct of the Magistrates—For it seems the Affair was accomplished so unexpectedly and suddenly that not one half of the Magistrates knew any Thing of the Matter till they were all kill'd; and those that did, could do nothing, unless it was to go at the Peril of their Lives, among an enraged and armed multitude, and attack them with Stones and Brickbats I have indeed heard it alleged against those Magistrates, that there were some soldiers in the Place, which they might have called to their Assistance—But I have heard it positively declared, by many of the inhabitants of that Town, who were Eye-witnesses of the whole Transaction, that if there were Ten Thousand Soldiers dispers'd and strolling about in the Manner that these were at the Time, it would have been impossible to have got them to their Arms, and properly drawn up, before the Indians were killed; so dextrous and expeditious were the Paxtonians in executing their Purpose* that the Bodies of the murdered were brought out and exposed in the Street."—This appears likewise to have been misrepresented—I have been informed by some of the most reputable Inhabitants of Lancaster, that they were never removed out of the Work-house and Work-house-yard where they were shot, till they were brought out to be carried to their Graves.....

“When a Waggon-Load of the scalped and mangled Bodies of their countrymen were brought to Philadelphia and laid at the State-House door, and another Waggon-Load brought into the Town of Lancaster, did they rouse to Arms to avenge the cause of their murder'd Friends? Did we hear any of those lamentations that are now so plentifully poured forth for the Conestogoe Indians.”

What the “Paxton Boys” had to say for themselves concerning this matter can be found in the “Declaration and Remonstrance” issued by them and other inhabitants of the frontier counties to the Governor and Assembly in February, 1764. In the Pennsylvania Journal of March 15, 1764, the “Declaration and Remonstrance” is printed in full, the opening of which is:

“A Declaration and Remonstrance of the oppressed and bleeding Frontier Inhabitants of the Province of Pennsylvania; presented by them to the honourable the Governor and Assembly of the Province, shewing the causes of their late Discontent and Uneasiness and the Grievances under which they have laboured, and which they humbly pray to have redressed.....”

“Inasmuch as the killing those Indians at Conestoga Mannor and Lancaster, has been, and may be the subject of much conversation; and by invidious Representations of it, which some, we doubt not, will industriously spread, many, unacquainted with the true State of Affairs, may be led to pass a severe Censure on the Authors of these Facts, and any other of those like Nature, which may hereafter happen, than we are persuaded they would if matters were duly understood and deliberated: We think it therefore proper thus openly to declare ourselves and render some brief Hints of the Reasons of our Conduct; which we must, and frankly do confess nothing but necessity itself could induce us to, or justify us in; as it bears an Appearance of flying in the Face of Authority, and is attended with much Labour, Fatigue and Expense....."

Undoubtedly the affair was the "subject of much conversation," but, owing to the shadows which began to cast themselves over the Province of a bigger event to follow, the conversation was to no purpose. The oppression of England in the colonies commenced as early as 1765, and minor troubles were then swallowed up in the greater ones. The "Paxton Boys" put a blot on the history of Lancaster county which no one can ever remove.

This Society is indebted to Mr. William Vincent Byars, of St. Louis, for finding the original paper—the bill for maintaining the Indians in the workhouse—and thanks is due him relative to this paper, as well as Mr. F. R. Diffenderffer, Dr. John W. Jordan, Philadelphia; Mr. A. R. Beck, Lititz, and Rev. H. A. Gerdson, for suggestions.

ANNUAL OUTING OF THE SOCIETY.

Friday, August 14, was a gala day in the history of the Lancaster County Historical Society. The occasion was the annual outing of the Society at Locust Grove, Conoy township, on the splendid lawn and grounds attached to the palatial home of Mr. B. F. Hoffman, whither the Society journeyed at the special request of its owner.

The mansion house is a remarkably well-preserved specimen of the best style of architecture towards the close of the Colonial era in our State. The great entrance hall, the large rooms, with their costly furnishings; the finely and sometimes quaint woodwork, are, perhaps, unequalled in the State in style and general appearance.

The spacious lawn around it, rising in three graduated terraces from the noble Susquehanna, with the Pennsylvania Railroad skirting the very border of the estate, and finally the greenly-carpeted lawn, dotted with stately trees of various kinds, and others of more moderate size, together with flower beds radiant with color, and other plants and shrubs and grasses, make a picture to delight the eye and soothe the spirits of the beholder.

It was on these grounds that the members of the Society gathered on Friday. Even the weather seemed to lend its charm to the scene. Cool breezes came from over the placid Susquehanna, and the foliage of the trees was continuously stirred into music by the swaying boughs.

Into this restful place the members of the Historical Society and their friends began to gather at about ten o'clock in the morning, and they kept coming from different localities until perhaps one hundred and fifty or two hundred persons were on the grounds. Of those from Lancaster some went by private automobiles, while the railroad took a larger number, which was increased by accessions at every station along the road until the numbers already mentioned were on the ground.

Through the kindness and consideration of the proprietor of the grounds seats and benches were provided for all comers, and when lunch time came along about twelve o'clock it found groups of individuals of both sexes, but the ladies largely in the majority, scattered all over the grounds, engaged in discussing the contents of the many boxes and lunch baskets they had brought with them.

The generosity of their host and hostess had provided an unlimited supply of most excellent coffee and cream free of charge to all who would have them, served from a large table near the kitchen. It is hardly necessary to say the abstainers were very few in number.

Between one and two o'clock in the afternoon the large audience was called to order by F. R. Diffenderffer, Litt. D., First Vice President of the Society, and who presided over the ceremonies during the afternoon. After calling upon the Rev. J. S. Armentrout, of Lancaster, who made a short prayer, the chairman made a few introductory remarks somewhat as follows:

"Ladies and Gentlemen—particularly the ladies—who to-day at least are showing their superiority numerically—and fellow-members of the Lancaster County Historical Society, and all others who have honored us with their presence, I give you all a most hearty greeting and welcome. We are glad we are here, and I trust our present outing will prove like its predecessors, both pleasant and profitable.

“By what cause, caucus or other consideration I have been catapulted into the position of presiding officer I do not know. I suppose it is because I am the baby member of our society. You all know it is the rule to put troublesome youngsters where they may be seen but not heard. With that proviso I accepted the position.

“And yet, I seem to be not altogether out of place here. Long before most of you were born I came, or, rather, was brought, to this place by my mother to visit her sister, my well-loved aunt, the late Mrs. Hannah Wiley, and later I visited my cousins, the Wiley girls and boys, one of whom is still living at a ripe old age in the neighboring town of Bainbridge. So you see I am not entirely a stranger here.

“Incidentally I may remark that my first visit came near being my last one also. Deceived by the clear water in the mill-race, or, some other running stream that ran near the house, I ventured in to pick up a shining pebble or something else. Before I knew what was going on I slipped and was floundering in deep water. Who fished me out I do not remember, perhaps never knew, but that I was not drowned and my earthly career untimely closed you may safely infer by my standing before you to-day. My second escape occurred on that same visit but there is no time to indulge in these personalities.

"But to return to where I started, I am glad to see so many present. It bespeaks a good time. You will no doubt hear silver-tongued orators, listen to learned historical disquisitions, sing the good old songs and go home thankful that you were here."

The following programme was then begun and carried to a successful conclusion:

Song—"My Country 'Tis of Thee;" Paper—"Melchoir Brenneman and His Descendants," prepared by Capt. Horace L. Haldeman, read by Mr. L. B. Herr; Song—"Battle Hymn of the Republic;" Address—"Sketches of Local History," by H. B. Jacobs, Esq.; Address—"Locust Grove, the Homestead," prepared by Capt. H. L. Haldeman, read by Mr. Haldeman O'Connor, of Harrisburg; Song—"My Old Kentucky Home;" Address—"The Place of Local History in Our General Human Activities," by H. Frank Eshelman, Esq.; Song—"Auld Lang Syne."

The addresses were prepared with unusual care, a fact easily perceived by the audience which was liberal in showing its appreciation of them.

At the invitation of Mr. Hoffman, owner of the old Manor House—it was built 124 years ago—the building was thrown open for the inspection of the visitors; many were prompt to accept the offer. After personal greetings among those present and the making of new friendships the crowd gradually took their homeward ways. Thus closed one of the most pleasant, successful and promising outings the Historical Society has ever had. From first to last it was an inspiration with many and will bear an abundant harvest of success in the days to come.

The homestead at Locust Grove was part of a tract of 440 acres conveyed by the Penns to John Galbraith on July 30, 1744. John Haldeman (1753-1832), by purchase, came into possession, with Col. Bertram Galbraith, of this tract of land, and by division John Haldeman received 246 acres, and in 1811 Locust Grove, the homestead, was built (so named as there were so many locust trees on the land), by John Haldeman and his wife, Maria Breneman Haldeman (1760-1835). Much care was taken in the selection of the stone. A grist mill was built near the residence in 1790, with the following inscription: "Erbaut Bei John Haldeman and Maria Haldeman." John Haldeman removed to Columbia and transferred the property to his son, John Breneman Haldeman (1779-1836), who on September 7, 1813, conveyed all this property to his son, Henry Haldeman (1787-1849), who was the father of the late Prof. Stehman Haldeman. On the death of Henry Haldeman he bequeathed this estate to his son, Cyrus Haldeman (1825-1892), who in 1852 sold the same to John Wiley, and upon his death it passed to his sons, Henry and John Wiley, and, after some years, to the present owner, Mr. Benjamin F. Hoffman.

One of Lancaster county's most distinguished citizens was Prof. Samuel Stehman Haldeman, who was born at Locust Grove, August 12, 1811. "In science and letters he was a great man"—a noted naturalist and linguist. He lived at Chickies, and was the partner of his brothers, Dr. Edwin Haldeman and Paris Haldeman, where they built a blast furnace. He was the author of many books. Among the number were 120 on natural science and 20 on language, with many more on various subjects. He was professor in several colleges in New Jersey and Delaware, and in the University of Pennsylvania. The latter conferred upon him the degree of Doctor of Laws. He gave assistance to Noah Webster, with his dictionary, and was also engaged in compiling the National and Worcester dictionary, and Johnson's Cyclopedia. Among the many honors he received was a prize given by Sir William Trevelyan, of England. The best philologists in Europe were competitors for this honor. Prof. Haldeman died September 10, 1880.

A Biographical Sketch.

Family History.

Religious persecution in Europe during the seventeenth century caused many thousands of families to flee from their homes, and among them were large numbers of a sect called Mennonites, who migrated soon after to the new province of Pennsylvania, and who have since that date formed a large portion of the Pennsylvania Germans.

Among these followers of Menno Simons was the Garber family, whose earliest traditional residence seems to have been near Basel, in Switzerland (1), from which they are said to have fled about the middle of the seventeenth century to a point on the upper Rhine known by the name of "Three Brides." (2)

Their stay here was, however, of comparatively short duration, as we find them making their way a little later to Holland, whence they were transported to the newly-founded Germantown in William Penn's colonizing venture in the New World. The exact date of their arrival in this country is not known, but it is thought to have been about the year 1695.

The given name of the head of the family at this time of migration has not come down to us, but for the sake of convenience we may (as is customary with American genealogists) call him the Emigrant. The name of his wife is also unknown, but it seems likely that he had at least two sons, Nicholas and John. This surmise is based on the fact that there are on record in the Lancaster County Court House two wills in the German language drawn up by them on February 24, 1748, and March 5, 1748, respectively. Both of these wills were proved on June 6, 1748, and from this we may infer that they were brothers, living perhaps on adjacent farms and dying only a few days or weeks apart.

However this may be, it seems fairly certain from the evidence afforded by later records that the subject of our sketch was not descended from Nicholas Gerber (as the name was then spelled).

John Gerber at the time of making his will was a resident of Lancaster County, and he mentions both wife and children, as well as his "eldest son," though none of them by name. Perhaps this "eldest son" was the Christian Gerber who made his will on November 5, 1768, and who is pretty definitely established to have been the great-great-grandfather of the subject of the present sketch. (3) This last-mentioned will is on record at Lancaster, and an abstract of it is also to be found in the Library of the Historical Society of Pennsylvania at Philadelphia. (4)

This Christian Gerber, the first of

3. Alex. Harris, in his work called "A Biographical History of Lancaster County," Lancaster, 1872, p. 230, states that it was this Christian Garber (Carver) who "emigrated from Germany sometime between the years 1700 and 1720, and settled in West Hempfield township." But this can hardly be correct.

Hempfield township (5), left to his son Christian his land and plantation in that township, to his wife Catherine certain bequests, and to his son Michael a plantation in Donegal township. There are also mentioned his eldest son Jacob, his son-in-law Jacob Kehr, and two grandchildren, Magdalena Neff and John Neff. The will was proved January 11, 1769.

Christian Gerber, the second of that name, made his will in turn on December 31, 1803, while a resident of Hempfield township. He, too, had a wife Catherine and a son Christian, to whom he left the home plantation. He furthermore mentions his granddaughter Mary, the only child of his deceased daughter, Mary, and two other sons. To John he bequeaths the land he had sold him in Virginia, and to Abraham the land he had sold him in York County nearby. Finally, he mentions his daughter Ann, the wife of Michael Segrist, and his deceased daughter Catherine, formerly the wife of John Stouffer. This will was proved on November 25, 1806.

Christian Gerber (the second) likewise had a son Christian, who married a Miss Segrist, and settled down upon his father's farm. This third Christian in direct line of descent had one son Jacob B. Garber, who was born in the year 1800, and who became quite a well-known character in Lancaster County before he died, at a ripe old age, in 1886. Many years ago he said: "The house I live in was built by my father in 1812, and is the third dwelling house erected on this farm, besides the squatter's cabin first put up in the wilderness." (6)

5. It was, of course, not until a later time that the original township was divided into East and West Hempfield townships.

6. Alex. Harris, op. cit., p. 230.

Jacob B. Garber was educated at the common school of the neighborhood, and even before attaining his majority displayed a marked taste for the study of botany. In 1832 he erected a greenhouse, said to be the first established in the State west of Philadelphia. Here he daily spent several hours in his favorite pursuit, and by degrees he was able to gather together many rare exotics. It was in this atmosphere that his son Abram P. Garber grew up, and it was undoubtedly the father's example and counsel that urged on the son to become the famous botanical explorer that he was.

Jacob B. Garber married Miss Susan Stauffer and raised a large family of children, among whom was the subject of the present biographical sketch. He also was an editor and author of prominence in the field of horticulture, and during his long life published many important articles on such subjects in Columbia, Lancaster, Philadelphia and Baltimore journals.

Boyhood.

Abram Paschal Garber was born January 23, 1838, on his father's farm Floral Retreat, about three miles east of Columbia, and a short distance south of Chestnut Hill, near Mountville, West Hempfield township, Lancaster county, Pa. There is an oil painting extant which represents his home at about this time, and which shows it to have been a brick house with a formal garden in front of it.

His early years were spent on the farm in a beautiful agricultural region only a few miles from the banks of the Susquehanna River. Lancaster County has been the home of many noted botanists, and with such surroundings it is thus easy to understand why the boy's naturally studious bent directed him at a very early age to the subject of botany, to which the greater part of his comparatively short life was so successfully devoted.

Millersville Normal School.

When A. P. Garber was still in his teens there was founded, in 1854, an academy for the education of the young people of the State, which was shortly to develop into a normal school. This was located a few miles from his home, at Millersville, and the growing lad was soon attracted to its atmosphere of study. He entered as a student here, apparently, in the autumn of 1856, and a little later signed the constitution of the Page Literary Society.

He continued at Millersville, with various interruptions, until the summer of 1865, when he graduated with a class of twelve young men and women. It was during this period of nine years that he taught for several winters public schools in various parts of Lancaster county, and then became principal of Catasauqua Seminary near Allentown, where he had four or five other teachers under him. (7)

Of his life at Millersville we have various information in the way of official and semi-official records, as well as in the personal reminiscences of several people still living who knew him at that time. While here he boarded with Mrs. Elizabeth Warfel opposite the school, going home to Mountville at the end of each week. His landlady still (May, 1914) remembers him as a "good boy," who did not give her the trouble that some of her other school boarders did. He took good care of himself, as his health even then was not of the best, and oftentimes when the boys went out on some expedition he would refrain from joining them on that account.

One of his classmates, Mr. John Morrow, late Assistant District Superintendent of the Pittsburgh Public Schools, wrote under date of June 18, 1914, as follows:

"I roomed with Garber for many months.....We were very intimate and always took walks together along the banks and silent waters of the Conestoga. Garber was a great botanist and seemed to be quite familiar with the flora of Lancaster County, as well as that of other sections of the State....."

"A. P. Garber inherited his botanical tendencies from his parents. I had a pleasing visit of several days with him at his home. His father had a greenhouse filled with a great variety of plants. This was the favorite resort of the senior Garber, and no doubt young Garber, in his early childhood, acquired a taste for plants and flowers from his youthful environment and paternal associations....."

It was during the Millersville period also that he became a member of the newly-founded Linnaean Society of Lancaster, and until the time of his death he took great interest in its proceedings and was frequently an enthusiastic participant in its field meetings.

In this period, too, falls A. P. Gar-ber's brief military experience as a private in Company C of the 195th Pennsylvania Volunteers. During the late summer and early fall of 1864 he saw service in West Virginia, Maryland and Pennsylvania. There is still in the possession of his family a little pocket testament which was given to him in Baltimore soon after he enlisted, and which he carried with him in his campaign.

Lafayette College.

A. P. Garber had early been attracted to the well-known botanist Dr. Thomas C. Porter, then a professor at Franklin and Marshall College at Lancaster. So when the time came to select a college in which to pursue his further studies it is not strange that his choice fell upon Lafayette College at Easton, Pa. For by that time his much-admired professor had left Franklin and Marshall for Lafayette. That he was a close student and proficient in his scientific work is evidenced by the fact that he was able to enter the Junior class in the fall of 1865, and to graduate in the scientific department in 1868, with an essay entitled "The Lesser Virtues."

At Lafayette College he became a member of the Washington Literary Society, and immediately upon graduation he was appointed an Assistant in Natural History. This position he held from 1868 to 1870, and during this time began the extensive botanical explorations which were later to bring his name prominently before the scientific world (8). In September, 1868, he visited Erie and explored the Lake Shore and Presque Isle; while during the months of August and September in the year following he traveled along the whole tier of northern counties from Wayne to Erie, and then southward through the counties west of the Alleghanies as far as the Virginia line. Later in the same service he made an excursion with the late Thomas P. James into the Pocono region of Monroe and Pike counties, and brought back a fine collection of mosses and liverworts. These labors, in the interest of the herbarium of Lafayette College, were made under the direction of Dr. Thomas C. Porter, Professor of Botany, and secured many valuable additions to the flora of the State; and although nothing wholly new to science was at this time discovered by him, at least twenty-seven species were added as found only by him (9).

As a Physician.

Dr. Garber's medical career extended, in all, over a period of about seven years; about half of this time he was a student of medicine, and about half a physician for the insane.

While still at Lafayette College he began the study of medicine under the direction of Dr. Traill Green (10), the professor of chemistry, and when he matriculated on October 14, 1869, in the School of Medicine of the University of Pennsylvania, in Philadelphia, his residence was given as Easton, Pa.

Of his life here until he graduated in 1872 we know but little except that his essay was entitled "The Medical Plants of Pennsylvania," in which title

In April, 1872, Dr. Garber became Assistant Resident Physician in the Harrisburg State Lunatic Hospital, living in the building itself and having charge of some two hundred patients. He remained in this position until May, 1875, when ill-health caused him to resign (12).

After leaving Harrisburg Dr. Garber opened an office as a practising physician in Pittsburgh, but the trying climate of this great manufacturing city told further upon his health, and after a few months he was obliged to leave Pennsylvania and to seek a more friendly Southern clime (13).

Explorations in Florida.

The inroads of consumption had by this time seriously impaired Dr. Garber's health, and from now on it appeared to him to be imperative that he spend his winters in a warmer climate than that of Pennsylvania. Accordingly we find him from this time on making yearly trips to Florida and the West Indies, returning during the summer to his home in Lancaster County.

Strange to say, an indirect result of his ill health was to make his name famous in the scientific world, and to attach his name permanently to quite a number of Florida plants. The defamously in the scientific world, and to botanical explorations in many parts of the peninsula and the adjoining islands are not known to us. Our scanty information concerning them comes chiefly from Dr. Garber himself, in the form of published articles and in correspondence with scientific friends.

In the archives of the Smithsonian Institution at Washington there is preserved a series of eleven letters which he addressed from time to time to Dr. George Vasey, who was at that time in charge of the botanical work of the Department of Agriculture at Washington. These letters all refer to his trips to Florida, and they throw an interesting light upon his views concerning the flora of the peninsula then so little known.

At the time when Dr. Garber visited Florida its flora was still awaiting investigation to a considerable extent, and it was his good fortune to be able to avail himself fully of this situation, and, hence, we find him making great additions to the world's knowledge of the flora of this part of the United States. By distributing many thousands of specimens to herbaria, both in his own country and in Europe, his discoveries have become widely known among botanists, and his name occurs in almost all books dealing with this field.

A more personal note may well be added at this point by quoting from a letter written by Dr. Garber from Miami, Fla., May 16, 1877, to Dr. George Vasey:

"I shall keep a sharp lookout for the Ulmus and Taxus you mention, but think they do not grow so far south. The vegetation is markedly different here from that of Middle North and West Florida, especially so in the woody growths. Then, too, a greater variation in size—Erythrina, which I have met in the latitude of Cedar Keys and Mellonville, was always a shrub four to five feet high—here it is common and generally of the same size, but also not uncommonly assumes the tree form and attains a height of twenty to thirty feet. I measured the trunk of one and found it seventeen inches in circumference, and guessed the height to be about thirty feet. The Mangrove I meet here as a shrub and.....sometimes a tree fully one hundred feet high—taller than any other tree. Black mangrove (Avicennia tomentosa), which at Cedar Keys is a shrub six to eight feet high, appears here always as a tree from thirty—fully sixty feet in height. Hummocks here are dense jungles of woody growth, very difficult to penetrate. The live oak is less plenty than farther north, but always occurs on the edges along the pines and is in many places literally covered with Tillandsia and Epidendron.....

"I encounter a good many disadvantages in exploring and drying here, but altogether my success was good and I am very well satisfied with the progress. I think I will have some new to our flora and possibly to science. I should like to delay longer in order to collect some plants in better stages, but it is not unlikely that I will meet many of the same plants at Ft. Myers and Peas Creek where I now propose to go. The Mail facilities there are not good and probably a month will enable me collect all there, and thence to Manatee and Tampa. To the last named place I will have my mail sent now.

Very truly,

A. P. GARBER."

St. Thomas and Porto Rico.

A Danish botanist, Baron Eggers, was at this time exploring the West:

Indies, and at his suggestion Dr. Garber made a trip to the Island of St. Thomas, one of the British West Indies. What the results of this trip may have been have not been ascertained, but it seems likely that many of the plants then obtained were incorporated in the collection which Baron Eggers himself was making at that time.

At the same botanist's suggestion Dr. Garber also made a trip to Porto Rico, in the early part of the year 1881, and succeeded in making a small collection of plants. Among the published letters of Professor Asa Gray, of Harvard University, there is one which refers to the proposed sale of Dr. Garber's small Porto Rican collection. Yauco was his headquarters here; but the expected benefit to his health from his stay on the island did not materialize (14).

Last Illness and Death.

Returning to his home in Lancaster County in the month of June, 1881, Dr. Garber settled down for the summer as usual on his father's farm, but the extremely hot weather soon affected him in his depleted condition so greatly that he was fain to seek relief in the mountains of North Central Pennsylvania. Here towards the end of August his condition became so alarming that he determined to return to his home. But he was only able to reach the summer resort of Renova, in Clinton county, before his strength gave out. He, therefore, sent word to his younger brother, Hiram L. Garber, to come to his assistance; but before his brother was able to reach him Dr. Garber passed away on August 25, 1881.

His remains were brought back to his old home by his brother, and there they were buried in the family graveyard on the adjacent farm by the side of his ancestors and relatives of many generations. (15)

This old burying ground has now been neglected for many years, and at the present time no trace of Dr. Garber's grave can be found. The spot is so thickly covered with high weeds, locust and blackberry bushes that it can only be penetrated with difficulty. Many of the graves and tombstones have sunken so far into the ground that it is impossible to read the inscriptions. The immediate family have all either died or removed to other parts of the country, and, hence, his grave is thus neglected (16).

The A. P. Garber Herbarium.

It is not definitely known when Dr. Garber began the formation of a herbarium of his own, but this probably occurred some time during his Millersville period. From remarks here and there in his correspondence with Dr. Vasey, and from other sources of information, we become aware of his interest in collecting plants of all sorts. His own personal efforts in this direction were largely supplemented by exchanges with various correspondents, until at length his private collections came to assume considerable proportions.

In February, 1885, his brother Hiram L. Garber sold the herbarium for a nominal sum to Franklin and Marshall College at Lancaster, with the stipulation that it should be known by the name of The A. P. Garber Herbarium, and this has been its name down to the present time.

16. Letter from Miss Ida M. Kim-mich, Mountville, Pa., Aug. 3, 1914, to G. C. K.

In the College Student for February, 1886, Professor John S. Stahr published a general account of the herbarium, which still remains the best and fullest description of its varied contents (17). Since that time the collection has been twice rearranged, and portions of it have been transferred to the herbaria of Columbia University and the Botanical Garden in New York in exchange for other specimens (18).

Contributions to Other Herbaria.

At the present time it is quite impossible to enumerate all the herbaria, both large and small, which contain dried plants collected by Dr. Garber. The best list so far published seems to be that given by Professor Urban, but even this is extremely incomplete (19). Besides those already mentioned we may note the United States National Herbarium in the Smithsonian Institution at Washington, the Herbarium at Kew Gardens in London, where there are 142 Porto Rican plants, the Gray Herbarium at Harvard University, the Canby Herbarium now in the College of Pharmacy of New York, the Herbarium of Lafayette College at Easton, Pa., and the Academy of Natural Sciences Herbarium in Philadelphia.

The specimens preserved in these form the basis of much of the advanced work of botanists who devote their attention to the peninsula of Florida with its many interesting vegetable forms.

Plants Named After Dr. Garber.

Even before his death his fellow botanists began naming Florida plants after Dr. Garber, and this process is still going on. Every year or two another plant is added to the list until it has become quite a long one.

These plants have been described in a great variety of books and periodicals which cannot, of course, be enumerated here. Suffice it to name the following:

Coccothrinax Garberi, a species of palm; Convolvulus Garberi, a species of morning glory; Eugenia Garberi, a species of myrtle (called also Garber's Stopper); Euphorbia Garberi, a species of spurge; Fissidens Garberi, a species of moss; Habenella Garberi, a species of orchid (called also Habenaria Garberi); Laciniaria Garberi, a species of snakeroot; Salvia occidentalis Garberi, a species of sage; Sphagnum Garberi, a species of moss; and Thrinax Garberi, a species of palm.

Professor Asa Gray also named the Garberia, a genus of the thistles, after him, and this distinction gave the discoverer a great deal of pleasure and satisfaction during the last years of his life.

Character and Appreciations.

We may perhaps most fittingly close this brief sketch of the life of an earnest student of nature by citing the estimates of his character and attainments given after his death by various people who knew him well many years ago.

His roommate at Millersville, Mr. John Morrow, said: "He was a young man of very pleasing disposition. I never saw him in the least ruffled or out of humor with any one.....I would be glad if it could be truthfully said of every young man that he had such a galaxy of admirable qualities as A. P. Garber. After a lapse of nearly fifty years, I have the most pleasant recollections of all my associations with him." (20)

Dr. J. T. Rothrock, a fellow botanist of his own day, states that he knew him quite well. "He was very successful, careful and reliable, not only as a collector, but as an observer. The beautiful collections that he made in Florida were very highly esteemed by those who were fortunate enough to secure a share of them. Dr. Gray thought very highly of Dr. Garber. I often heard him speak of Dr. Garber most kindly" (21).

And finally Dr. Thomas C. Porter, his most intimate scientific friend, in speaking of him, once said: "From my long and pleasant association with him I am able to say that he was a most patient, thorough and accurate student, skilled in the use of the microscope and an accomplished naturalist. His powers of observation were very acute, as shown by his letters and notes, and the specimens prepared by him excelled in every way. Quiet, modest, faithful, an agreeable companion, and an earnest Christian, the tidings of his early death caused profound sorrow and regret to his scientific friends and associates." (22)

Minutes of the October Meeting

Lancaster, Pa., Oct. 2, 1914.

The regular monthly meeting of the Lancaster County Historical Society was held this evening in the Society's quarters in the Public Library Building. President Steinman presided, with Miss Martha B. Clark as Secretary.

The Librarian, Miss Lottie M. Bausman, presented the following report:

Bound Volumes—Year Book of the Pennsylvania Society of New York, 1901, 1904, 1905, 1906, 1907, 1908, 1909, 1910, 1911, 1912, 1913, 1914, from the Pennsylvania Society of New York City; American Historical Association, Report for 1912; State Treasurer's Annual and Detailed Reports, 1912 and 1913; Secretary of Internal Affairs, Annual Reports, 1912, parts I-II; Secretary of Internal Affairs, Annual Reports, 1913, part IV; Topographic and Geologic Survey Commission of Pennsylvania, Report No. 10; Topographic and Geologic Survey Commission of Pennsylvania, Report No. 10, maps.

Magazines and Pamphlets—American Jewish Historical Society Publications, No. 22; American Jewish Historical Society Publications, Index of Nos. 1 to 20; Western Reserve Historical Society, Tract No. 93; Penn Germania, September, 1914; American Catholic Historical Society, Records; International Conciliation; Pennsylvania Magazine; Bulletin of New York Public Library; Bulletin of

Grand Rapids Public Library; Postcard of Entrance to Fair Grounds, from D. B. Landis.

Four portraits of prominent citizens of Lancaster county were offered to the society, and they will be accepted. They are works of Eichholtz, and will prove an interesting addition to the collection owned by the society. Similar gifts will be accepted at any time by the society with thanks.

New members were elected as follows: Martin E. Musser, of Mountville; Mr. and Mrs. Harry Hiestand, of Marietta; Mr. and Mrs. Harry L. Newcomer, of Mt. Joy; Hon. H. Burd Cassel, of Marietta; B. F. Hoffman, of Bainbridge, and Mrs. John M. Brandt, of Mount Joy.

The paper of the evening was a biographical sketch of Dr. Abram P. Garber, a noted botanist, who lived near Mountville in early life. It was read by George C. Keidel, Ph.D., of Washington, D. C. The paper was most interesting, and a discussion followed, the participants being Rev. Dr. R. C. Schiedt and A. K. Hostetter. Suggestion was made for the reading of an article mentioned in the paper by Rev. Dr. John S. Stahr on Dr. Garber in the "College Student" of February, 1886.

In his remarks Rev. Dr. Schiedt said that the society was greatly indebted to Dr. Keidel for his valuable contribution to Lancaster county history. Dr. Keidel was formerly a member of the Johns Hopkins University, and is now connected with the Congressional Library at Washington. Accustomed to academic precision, he is especially fitted for work of this kind. Rev. Dr. Schiedt presented a few specimens of Dr. Garber's collection, which numbers between 4,000 and 5,000 specimens, in order to show the excellency of his work. It was stated by Dr. Schiedt that Dr. Garber's explorations of Florida proved an incentive for further extensive work in the South to one of the students of Franklin and Marshall College, Dr. John K. Small, the present curator of the New York Botanical Garden. Referring to the herbarium of Dr. Small it was remarked by Dr. Schiedt that it is undoubtedly the most noted authority on Florida plants at the present day. Four books have been published on the subject. Dr. Small received his first knowledge of Florida plants from Dr. Garber's collection, which he helped to arrange while a student at Franklin and Marshall College.

Dr. Keidel was extended a vote of thanks for his excellent paper and it was referred to the Executive Committee for action.

Signed:

MISS MARTHA B. CLARK,
Secretary Pro Tem.

STIEGEL'S LIFE AND LEGENDS

A recently-published volume, entitled "Stiegel Glass," of which Frederick William Hunter is the author, may not be the "Last Word About Stiegel," but it is certainly the latest and most authoritative revision of the story of that romantic and picturesque figure in the Colonial and Revolutionary periods of Lancaster county history and in the incipient stages of its industrial development. The book is sumptuously and expensively printed, in limited edition, and will likely find its way mostly to the shelves of public libraries and private collectors. This may be accepted as an excuse for briefly reviewing its contents and value here. Moreover, many of those who have heretofore written of this subject—and some of us who have casually contributed to its discussion through the published transactions of this society—have been, perhaps, too ready to accept and perpetuate popular and unsupported tradition for fact. Without the facilities at hand, which Mr. Hunter seems to have exhausted, for a thorough study of the man and his works, and without the time and opportunity he has had to examine, weigh and pass upon original documents and records, we have allowed figments and fiction to become imbedded in what ought to be accurate historical narrative, and the earlier the corrections are made the better we serve the purposes of this society.

Apart from the fact that Stiegel's greatest activities were exerted in our county, the authorship and patronage of this book have a local interest. Its author, Frederick William Hunter, tells us at the outset that he is descended on the paternal side from the Berks county iron masters of his name, and his mother's ancestors were Lutheran clergymen of Eastern Pennsylvania; either incident would tend to stimulate a study of Stiegel. Mr. Hunter may be further identified by some of our members as the son of Jacob F. Hunter, a cousin of that Frederick Hunter whose widow became the second wife of Rev. Dr. E. V. Gerhart, and whose daughters were well known in Lancaster society forty years ago. A sister of Mr. Hunter, lately deceased, married J. B. Kerfoot, formerly of Chicago, now, like Mr. Hunter, resident of New York. He was a descendant of the well-known Kerfoot family of Lancaster, of which one branch achieved fame and fortune in Chicago. To Mr. Kerfoot the author makes acknowledgment of invaluable aid in preparing and publishing the book.

Long time a collector of Chinese glass, Mr. Hunter's submerged attention to and knowledge of Stiegel glass was awakened so late as 1911 by automobile trips through upper Lancaster county—especially to and in the vicinity of Elizabeth Furnace and Mannheim—where he was frequently offered for sale bits of the genuine Stiegel glass, as well as many specimens mistakenly identified. A determination to explore the history and processes, the varieties, shapes, colors, origin, handicraft and values of the Stiegel glass, suggested to Mr. Hunter the necessity of studying the history of the man Stiegel himself, and of disentangling the thread of his life's story from the tangled mass of exaggeration, romance, tradition and fiction in which it had become enmeshed. His work, therefore, divides itself into two parts; and, while the personal narrative has the greater relevancy to the purposes of this paper, the elaborate catalogues of the glass itself, the story of Mr. Hunter's own collection presented to the Metropolitan Museum, the magnificent twelve plates in color and one hundred and fifty-nine half-tones which adorn this book, the appendices, with their lists of employes and artisans, their wages and duties, the briefs of title and other authentic data not only help to comprise a monumental work of technical and artistic interest, but by far the most elaborate chronicle of any industry that ever flourished in our local history.

At the outset Mr. Hunter evidently procured, consulted and studied every accessible published work that related, even remotely, to his subject. These histories, sketches, pamphlets, &c., number nearly fifty. Even the most superficial of them is treated with good-natured tolerance; and the freedom from asperity, with which the author disperses some of the hoary traditions, and dispels many misty illusions, is one of the best characteristics of his style.

Without doing violence to copyrighted privileges, or injustice to the author's private property, I may venture to say that his work satisfies me that he is correct in certain conclusions, about which there has been much popular misapprehension and possibly some personal misstatement.

First—Stiegel was not a baron, a nobleman nor of a noble family within the meaning of those terms in Germany at the time of his emigration. He was born at Cologne—not Mannheim—May 13, 1729; eldest of a family of six children. His father died June 22, 1741.

"Heinrich Wil Stiegel," as he subscribed himself, came to this country on the "Nancy," from Cowes, Isle of Wight, landing at Philadelphia, August 31, 1750. He brought with him his mother, Dorothea Elizabeth, who died here January 11, 1781; and his youngest brother, Anthony, aged eleven, who married twice. His second wife died at Schaefferstown as late as 1824.

Second—Stiegl' did not bring with him 40,000 pounds; nor, so far as reliable evidence appears, any considerable amount of money. His face and figure, attractive manner, ambition and intelligence were his principal fortune. There is no adequate proof that he engaged in business ventures or made profitable investments in Philadelphia.

Third—He likely came to Lancaster; visited the monastic settlements of the Seventh Day Baptists at Ephrata, explored the region of Schaefferstown and the Furnace Hills; met, and, on November 7, 1752, married Elizabeth, daughter of Jacob (not Johann) Huber, the master of Elizabeth Furnace. Neither it nor the township was named after Stiegel's wife, nor by him.

Fourth—He acquired an interest and relations with his father-in-law in Elizabeth Furnace. He owned Charming Forge, near Womelsdorf (now Lebanon county), and sought Philadelphia partners and capital in extending his business operations. John Dickinson, of Revolutionary fame, was one of his legal advisers. Likewise George Ross, Wm. Atlee and Jasper Yeates.

Fifth—It is very doubtful if he ever had a "city home" in or near Philadelphia. There is no record to prove he ever owned any realty there, except two small lots, on which there may have been a warehouse and store, to sell his glass. He may have temporarily resided in the city from time to time.

Sixth—The Stedmans, who joined him in the Elizabeth operation, were agents for the ship line on which Stiegel came to America.

Seventh—He married Elizabeth Holtz, October 24, 1758, eight months after the death of his first wife and the birth of their second daughter.

Eighth—At the beginning the Stiegel-Stedman operations of Elizabeth and Charming Force were profitable; their activities led to the acquisition of large land holdings, running up to an acreage exceeding 10,000. The future site of the town of Mannheim was first purchased independently by the Stedmans—not by Stiegel, who “bought in” soon after.

Ninth—Stiegel had artistic tastes and temperament, and inventive genius as well as business energy and vision. He improved the Franklin stove and devised the six and ten-plate. His decorative plates were artistic, after the fashion of the day. He erected comfortable workmen's homes and a stately mansion for himself. He advertised extensively. He likely made one trip to London, in the latter part of 1763, and promoted shipments abroad of his bar iron. This was the period of his greatest prosperity; but at no time was his estate anything like the traditional 40,000 pounds.

Tenth—His first experiments at glass making were at Elizabeth, in 1763, not in Mannheim—a fact which, I think, Mr. Hunter's own investigations have first established. The lure of this fascinating and promising “infant industry” drew him measurably away from the iron interest and toward the larger establishment, the baronial manner of business and living and the elaborate style of his mansion and equipage in Mannheim. Window glass and the coarser forms of table glass were made in Elizabeth, but after the Mannheim glass houses started work, the first in November, 1765, the second in 1769, the variety of ware was greatly enlarged, the artistic excellence of form and color much increased and its vogue was widely extended. Stiegel's trans-Atlantic trip was followed by the importation of skilled workmen from Italy, England and Germany, and the Mannheim factory came to compete with European glass centers, having its salesroom in New York and Philadelphia and agents in a score of Colonial towns.

Eleventh—As the iron industry languished and the financial embarrassment of the Stedman enterprises increased, Stiegel's plans in glass became more elaborate, extended and risky. By 1771, when their advertisement was most pretensions, his ventures were most hazardous; and his three lottery schemes—the last of which was abortive—were not so much the outcrop of a gaming spirit as they were props to a failing fortune. They did not avail, however, and the sheriff sold his Mannheim estates February 3, 1774, his iron properties having been partly disposed of prior to that and Elizabeth Furnace went under the hammer a little later.

Twelfth—While Stiegel actually "did time" in prison for debt, he did not languish and lament in confinement for the long period often sympathetically and romantically related. He was in Mannheim November 21, 1774, and, on December 24, 1774, the General Assembly passed the act for his relief and release, none objecting.

Thirteenth—On May 5, 1774, Stiegel had leased the glass works to Smith & Simund; and on October 25, 1775,

William Basman, Michael Dffen-derffer, Paul Zantzinger, Casper Singer and Frederick Kuhn were operating the Manheim glass works.
Either James Jenkins or David Rittenhouse ran the Manheim glass works for a brief period after the Stiegel failure; Robert Morris, the financier of the Revolution,
bought the mansion in September, 1777, and his family lived there until after the British evacuation of Philadelphia, in 1778.

Fourteenth—When the Manheim domed glass house was torn down, in 1812, the bricks were hauled to Neffs-ville, and from them was constructed the hotel there; in a marble tablet inserted in the gable wall is the inscription:

Built by LEONARD FIDLER
and BARBARA FIDLER,
A. D. 1812.

It will be remembered that one of our departed members was several times interrupted in her attempt to inform the Society that the old name of "Fidler's Green," which once attached to Neffsville, as firmly as "Noo-dledoosy" to Fruitville, did not originate from Lancaster dances held on the tavern lawn, but from the name of the builder of the hotel. She was right.

Fifteenth—Of the later life and death of Stiegel—more clearly verified by record—Mr. Hunter's narrative confirms most of the other historians. That he was a Tory, or that he was ever visited by Washington or British Generals is untrue. While he served Robert Coleman as foreman at Elizabeth, that furnace made munitions of war for the Revolutionary army, as did all that chain of iron works between which and the British Washington kept a line of separation while the Valley Forge campaign lasted. Washington's visit to Elizabeth was as guest of Coleman, in 1792, when he was President, and Robert Morris, David Rittenhouse, Provost William Smith and Trench Francis accompanied him. Mr. Hunter confirms the fact that the location of Stiegel's grave, like that of Moses, is unknown even to this day; probability locates it at Charming Forge. Nor can the last resting-places of Stiegel's mother, his second wife or his brother, Anthony, be identified.

I have too far extended these notes to touch upon Mr. Hunter's history of glassmaking generally, and of the richness of the Stiegel output. One of our own members has a rare collection of it, which could be illuminated and illustrated to great advantage and with much interest, by comparison with the catalogues and plates of this work. They will be alike a surprise and treasure to connoisseurs and collectors.

My purpose has been neither to praise Mr. Hunter—much as his labors deserve it—nor to advertise his book, for it does not need it. He is a highly successful lawyer in New York; and his co-worker and brother-in-law, J. B. Kerfoot, is the keen book critic of "Life," the sprightliest of our weeklies. Rather, in justice to ourselves, I desire to point out wherein he seems to have set aright some inaccuracies and dispelled some myths. I cheerfully admit facts alone are not history—a man may know a "wilderness of facts" and not be a historian; as the accurate photograph may really caricature its subject and distort the original while the true portrait reveals the soul, so the historian must have imagination and sentiment and a bit of the partisan spirit will do no harm. Mathematics is an accurate science, but "the devout astronomer is mad." Within the limitations of ascertained facts the historian may romance as to the likely drop the chips or shavings that misrepresent nor misstate, nor suppress the truth. We, as a society, profess to record history as made in its own workshop, and we must fearlessly drop the chips or shavings that have concealed or exaggerated the truth. So long as the Stiegel tradition keeps within these bounds, so long may it grow and flourish, and each recurring Feast of Roses give new touches of color to a career that, with all its failures, must ever remain one of the most romantic and picturesque in the history of Lancaster county.

JOHN SCOTT AND THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS

The history of the public schools of the community surrounding Donegal is linked with the early history of Donegal itself. Especially is this true with regard to the townships of East Donegal and Conoy and the Borough of Marietta. Prior to the establishment of the public school system of Pennsylvania, the school masters of these localities came from Donegal. According to the most authentic information, the first school house in East Donegal township was built at Donegal Springs, a few years after the church was built. Colin McFarquhar, one of the early ministers of Donegal Church, taught a classical school, and, during his residence in Maytown, prepared a number of young men for college. The second oldest school house stood near the spring in Duffy's Park, about a mile outside of Marietta. This was as early as 1750, and an Irishman, named Murphy, taught here prior to the Revolution. Thomas Marshall Boggs, a Donegal pastor, taught a classical school in Marietta and Mount Joy. Joseph Jeffries, an Irishman, was one of the first teachers in the Borough of Marietta. He had previously taught at Donegal Church and at Breneman's, in Conoy.

The first school in Marietta, according to the best authority, was kept by a Mr. McCready on Walnut street. Afterward Mr. Jamison kept a school on Front street, but this became too busy and noisy, especially in rafting seasons, and Mr. Jamison removed his school to a one-story frame house in an alley just in the rear of the Bowman residence.

When Messrs. Anderson and Cook laid out portions of their respective farms into town lots, called Waterford and New Haven, in what is now the borough of Marietta, the former devoted the triangle, now occupied by the Marietta High School, for a school house and play ground, and it was here that the "Bell School" house was built. This was distinguished from other schools of later date by being called the "Public School." It was of brick, a full story high and about forty feet square, surmounted by a belfry at the east end, in which was a small but remarkably clear and loud-toned bell, said to have been purchased from a Philadelphia steamboat, and, therefore, in the habit of sounding loud to overcome the noises of city wharves and streets. James Anderson, who was primarily responsible for the establishment of this school in having provided the land in laying out his town, was one of the early Donegal settlers.

In what is now Conoy township, the early schools were taught by Donegal masters; and, according to some authorities, the common school system was accepted before the township of Conoy was cut off from Donegal in 1842.

John Scott, the subject of this sketch, was born in Ireland on the first day of May, 1773, and died on the eighth day of October, 1842. He came to Donegal in the last years of the Eighteenth Century. Scott was a fence maker and plied his trade among the early settlers and farmers of this community. This is attested by the large slab which marks his resting place in the Donegal Cemetery, immediately adjoining the church, for there appears thereon two posts, with a number of rails, the top ones of which are broken. The following story is told explanatory of this design:

A prominent member of the Donegal congregation was responsible for the design in that he prevailed upon John Scott's executor to procure it. When asked in later years the significance of the broken rails, he said it indicated that the bars had been broken and John Scott's soul let through. The same member of the congregation claimed to be the author of the following lines which appear on the slab:

'How loved, how valued once, avails thee not,
 To whom related or by whom begot,
 A heap of dust alone remains of thee,
 'Tis all thou art and all the proud shall be."

Scott was unmarried and lived in a small house in what is now the village of Maytown. He was frugal in his mode of living and evidently saved his earnings, for when he died in 1842, he left an estate valued at several thousand dollars.

His last will and testament reads as follows:

In the name of God; Amen. I, John Scott, of Donegal township, Lancaster county and State of Pennsylvania, calling to mind the mortality of my body and being of sound and perfect mind ordain this to be my last will and testament. And first, I recommend my soul unto God who gave it, my body to the dust in the hope of a glorious resurrection at the last day through the merits of my blessed Savior. And second, it is my will that my body be buried in decent manner and as respect what God has given me in this life is ordained and bequeathed in the following manner—that all my just debts be paid and the remainder of my real and personal property be applied to the maintaining and support of my beloved, honored mother during her natural life, and at her decease, if anything remains, to be placed in the following manner—that two stones be placed on our graves not to exceed two hundred dollars and the remainder to be applied to the following use, to John McKee one hundred dollars, and to the education of poor children of all denominations to read the Bible, the best of all books, and it is my will that Peter Creabel and William Kearr be my executors of this my last will and testament, this third day of February, 1820.

Witness my hand and seal,
JOHN SCOTT.

N. B.—I do empower my executors to sell my real and personal property and apply the same to the use above mentioned by me.

JOHN SCOTT.

The spelling and construction of this will indicate that Scott was not a man of culture or education, and it is very doubtful, in my mind, whether his money was used for the purpose for which he intended it, for he evidently had in mind the religious rather than secular education of poor children.

A feature of this will, which may or may not be of particular significance, is the fact that Scott named as his executors William Kearr, a Scotch Irishman and Donegal pastor, and Peter Creabel, a Pennsylvania German.

Scott's mother had evidently died before him, for immediately upon his death there was an attempt on the part of the authorities to have his estate escheated to the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and this could only have been accomplished in view of the fact that he had no heirs or legal representatives to survive him. The proceedings to escheat the estate were resisted and Abram N. Cassel, who was one of the School Directors of Donegal township, interested Jacob Foreman, a member of the Assembly of Pennsylvania from Conoy township, and William Hlester, a member of the Senate, in the matter, with the result that on the fourth day of April, 1843, Hon. David R. Porter, then Governor of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, approved a law, entitled: "An act to authorize the sale and conveyance of certain real estate, and for other purposes."

This Act of Assembly was one of those omnibus bills, which contain a number of subjects not related in any way to one another. For instance, the first section provided that "the trustees of the four United Congregations of Presbyterians or Reformed Churches in Lancaster county, be and they are, hereby authorized and empowered to sell certain real estate;" another section legalized a misnomer of the Trustees of Franklin College, in a certain conveyance of real estate; another section appointed certain commissioners to receive money, superseding certain others appointed in 1828; another section authorized the Trustees of Blockley Baptist Church, in the county of Philadelphia, to erect a new church building; and, finally, section 7, vested certain real estate in Nancy Call, in Westmoreland county, in the western part of the State. Section 3 of this Act of Assembly was as follows:

"That Peter Graybill, surviving executor of the last will and testament of John Scott, late of Donegal township, Lancaster county, deceased, be and hereby is authorized to pay over to the treasurers of the townships of East Donegal and Conoy, in the said county, in proportion to the number of taxables in each, the proceeds of the estate of the said John Scott, which may remain after paying the debts of the said deceased, and the bequests mentioned in the said will, who shall, with the approbation of the Court of Common Pleas of the said county, invest the same in bonds secured by mortgage on real estate, within said county, in trust for the support of the schools of said townships, and shall apply the interest thereof from time to time, as the same may be received, as may be directed by the School Directors of said townships respectively."

The best historic authority, in writing of John Scott, says that upon his death he devised the bulk of his property to the schools of Donegal. While it is true that the balance of his estate was distributed among the school districts of what was then Donegal township, it was only done in accordance with the preceding section of the Act of the General Assembly of 1843, and not in accordance with his last will and testament.

The common school system of Pennsylvania was established by Act of the General Assembly of Pennsylvania, approved the first day of April, 1834, but the citizens of Donegal township refused to accept the law and declined to levy a tax to support the same. A. N. Cassel, William D. Slaymaker and others, who were friends of the common school law, were elected School Directors and used their best endeavors to acquaint the citizens of the community with the good features of the system. They employed teachers and made themselves personally responsible for the teachers' salaries. This was not without its effect, for in the following year, we are told, the farmers of the district came to the support of the law and taxes were levied in accordance therewith.

Upon the erection of Conoy township in 1842, it was immediately decided to adopt the system, and a School Board, consisting of Frederick Hipple, Dr. Robert H. Jones, John Haldeman, Solomon Haldeman, John W. Hamilton and John Smith, Jr., was elected. This board held its first meeting April 4, 1842, whereupon the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

"That Conoy township does accept of the common school system, to commence on the first Monday of June next, and that the County Commissioners be requested to make the necessary arrangements to carry out said system according to the Act of Assembly."

On April 8, 1844, the Conoy Township School Board passed a resolution to build four new houses out of the fund "bequeathed by John Scott, of Donegal," one of said houses to be situated in Bainbridge, one at Stony Run, near Collins' Station, one at John Kob's on the Falmouth and Elizabethtown turnpike, and one at Ebersole's. These houses were built by contract at prices from $220 to $265, and the houses at Kob's and Ebersole's are still used for school purposes, while the one at Falmouth was abandoned some years ago.

The amount received by Conoy township from the John Scott estate, in accordance with the Act of Assembly before referred to, was $1,234.18, and a larger amount must have been received by East Donegal township.

This Act of Assembly shows that political log rolling was as common in 1843, if not more so, than it is to-day. The historian says that Mr. A. N. Cassel got Mr. Jacob Foreman, member of the Legislature from Conoy township, interested in the bill, as well as William Hiester, who was a member of the Senate. While Conoy township had been cut off from Donegal prior to this time, it is evident that Mr. Cassel had to agree that Conoy township should get a portion of the fund in return for Mr. Foreman's support of the measure, while Mr. Foreman evidently had to promise the members from Philadelphia county to vote for that section of the bill authorizing the erection of the Blockley Baptist Church; and William Hiester, a member of the Senate, must have insisted upon those portions of the bill relating to Franklin College and the election of certain commissioners.

It was as true in 1843 as it is to-day that the Legislative game is one of give and take and in order to accomplish a good end, such as that accomplished by Mr. Foreman and Mr. Hiester, it is often necessary to reciprocate by voting for other measures in which members from other sections are interested, even though they might not be quite so meritorious.

Minutes of November Meeting

Lancaster, Pa., Nov. 6, 1914.

The regular monthly meeting of the Lancaster County Historical Society was held this evening in the society's room, with the president in the chair and Miss Martha B. Clark acting as secretary pro tem.

Bound Volumes—The History of Nations, 25 volumes, gift from a friend whose name is withheld; Smull's Legislative Hand Book, 1914.

Magazines and Pamphlets—Annals of Iowa; Cambridge Historical Society, publications; Historical Society of Frankford, papers; Linden Hall Echo; Historic Buildings now standing in New York which were erected prior to Eighteen Hundred, from Capt. E. E. Stokes, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Bulletin of the New York Public Library; Bulletin of the Grand Rapids Public Library; Bulletin of the Carnegie Library, Pittsburgh; Eighteenth Annual Report of the Carnegie Library; number of the Society's Pamphlets, from Miss Mary Dougherty; two numbers of the Jersey Shore Herald, containing the inscriptions on headstones in Old Pine Creek Graveyard. These inscriptions were copied by Fort Antes Chapter, D. A. R., and sent by that chapter as a gift to this society.

Warming-pan, from Miss Maltz, of New York City.

Iron bolt, taken from the Aaron Burr Water Works, first in New York City, and stone from a fence in Bowling Green, New York, erected by the Colonists, from Capt. E. E. Stokes, of Brooklyn, N. Y., through H. M. Werner.

The name of Christian Neff, of Elizabethtown, was proposed for membership.

Two papers were read, one by Mr. Bernard J. Myers, on "John Scott and the Public Schools," and the other, written by Mr. Hensel, on "Stiegel's Life and Legends." Both papers were of unusual interest.

The discussion which followed was participated in by Mr. F. R. Diffenderffer, Mr. A. K. Hostetter, Mrs. A. K. Hostetter and Miss Bausman.

THE SHIPPEN HOUSE--FRONT VIEW

THE PASSING OF AN OLD LANDMARK

It is only fair to the writer, as well as to his audience, to say a considerable part of the material of this sketch has already been read to and heard by a parlor audience in this city. I should not have had the temerity to submit it to your indulgent consideration, even in this form, but for the persuasive importunity of your president, who seemed to think the subject should have some place in the permanent and published annals of the Society.

Eliminating, therefore, many irrelevant matters that were contained in an address before the Shippen School for Girls, February 22, 1910 (to which reference may be had for them), I avail myself of your invitation to record some facts relative to the old Shippen mansion, just demolished, at the northwest corner of Lime and Orange streets, and to indulge in some reflections on domestic architecture and social life in Lancaster, suggested by the passing of one of the most notable landmarks of household life in our fair town.

Notwithstanding the stability of Lancaster's population and the persistence in its citizenship of many families who have been of it for generations, there is a notable absence of homesteads in the possession of even the third generation since their foundation. Throughout the county there are not a few family estates which have continued in the ownership of successive generations since the original proprietary grants. Nor are they restricted to any one of the racial elements which make up our composite citizenship. In the Pennsylvania-German settlements, such as the Strasburg-Lampeter-Pequa tract, Landis Valley and Graf-Thal, numerous farms are in the same name and family, as two centuries ago. In the Caernarvon region the footprint of the Welsh iron master has not yet been wholly ploughed down by an alien race. The Colemans and Grubbs retain large ancestral holdings on the Furnace Hills. In the Quaker Chester Valley, until very lately, the Pownall family held title direct from Penn; and among the Scotch-Irish of the Lower End the farm granted in 1745 to James McSparran, First, passed successively to the Second, Third, Fourth and Fifth of the same name and blood; and it never left the family until a later generation, in April, 1908.

But in the city of Lancaster and its immediate suburbs it is exceptional to find any estate a hundred years old in the control of its founder's family; or upon which three full generations of one blood have dwelt continuously. "Abbeville," one of the most attractive of our older houses, refashioned from an old farmhouse by Langdon Cheves, passed through various mutations of ownership before it came into the Hager family in 1855. It has had three generations as occupants and owners, bidding fair to remain a permanent possession. "Wheatland," built nearly a hundred years ago, by William Potter, passed from one stranger to another. The "Hand house," alas! has long been lost to family and historical sentiment. "Grand View" early passed from the ownership of the third generation. The imposing Grubb house was built by the father of its present owner. Unique in its architecture, "Hardwicke," founded by Judge Charles Smith, had the largest variety of ownership down to the time of its demolition, when it was the estate of Chief Justice Ellis Lewis' daughter, Mrs. James Wiley. Prior to that, associated with it are such names as the Cassatts, Brintons and Thomas McElrath, partner of Horace Greeley in the ownership of the New York Tribune, who gave it its varied arboriculture and decorated its lawn with the marble statuary so familiar to Lancastrians.

The Cope house, at the northeast corner of Lime and Grant, is now replaced by a modern mansion. At the same period of the Revolution it had sheltered Andre, the spy, and Despard, the regicide—both destined to the scaffold. The Copes early relinquished it, and long as it was the property of the late Hon. A. Herr Smith he never manifested the slightest sentiment for its romantic associations.

In the Long home, with its picturesque story-and-half house, where the Hamilton Club stands, abode three, if not more, generations of one family. In various parts of the city, some like old-fashioned and unnoticed humble houses have long remained in one family; and I recall visiting one of these on Howard avenue some years ago, where the granddaughters of the builder (1801), with puffed hair and crinoline, looked as if they had stepped out of a fashion plate of the early Nineteenth century.

One of the most notable of the older edifices still standing is the Light house, now Fisher's grocery, at the northwest corner of Lime and East King, once the center of Light's nursery, operated by the grandfather of the late Dr. John L. Atlee, Sr. On its eastern end is a fine specimen of gable cornice; the date in dark-colored bricks—"1761"—attests its time.

Another fine specimen of the earlier Lancastrian period is the building owned by Alderman Spurrier, at the northwest corner of Mifflin and South Queen streets—once the city home of Judge Charles Smith—across Mifflin street, on the opposite corner, was the home of his father-in-law, Jasper Yeates, now transformed. Behind the Smith home, at the northeast corner of Mifflin and Beaver, was the "Kitty" Yeates garden. In the rear of the Yeates property, long after the installation of a municipal water supply, was a "horse pond;" indeed "the Yeateses always had a horse pond."*

The Kelly house, with the old-fashioned sun dial, at the northwest corner of Orange and Shippen, is one of the few remaining models of an artistic day. The destruction of the Atlee stone house on the northwest corner of Duke and Orange was the irreparable loss of what would have been an ideal home for this Society.

*The records indicate that Jasper Yeates, at the time of his death, owned both the southwest and northwest corners of South Queen and West Mifflin streets. He purchased the southwest corner in 1775 and the northwest corner in 1784. His will refers to his house "wherein I now live" as being "in Queen street." His daughter, Mary, wife of Judge Charles Smith, acquired title to the Spurrier property from the other heirs of Judge Yerkes, in 1817.

Graef Hotel (later Shober's), to make place for the Y. M. C. A. Building, there passed away one of Lancaster's grand, old-time structures. The "Bowsman" house, on East King street, with its fine date plate, has long been out of the Bausman name, but that of the Jefferies family has for many years attached to it.

Most happily, when the great house and law office of George Ross, on the site of the present Court House, were torn down, the window and door frames were taken into the Lightner house, at Lemon and Duke, where Mr. Miller, the present owner, preserves them as fine illustrations of the excellence of old Lancaster domestic architecture.

The old Franklin College buildings, on Lime street, for many years have been transformed architecturally. The truncating of the fine feudal tower of the County Prison was a blunder that even now should be repaired. Restored to the eastern sky-line, it would be admirably balanced by the Gothic towers of Franklin and Marshall, rising above the foliage of College Hill, whose pinnacles catch the shafts of the dying sun as it sets behind the western horizon. The names of Haviland and Patrick Hayden Smith will ever be associated with Lancaster architecture during the fifties of the last century. The obliteration of the Court House of 1784 in Penn Square was vandalism, which we may hope will never be paralleled by the destruction of the present City Hall.

One very reasonable cause for this brief tenure of family continuity in possession of ancestral homesteads is to be found in the conditions under which Lancaster was originally settled and built. Its present circumscribed area was not only then deemed ample, but English and German residents alike crowded to the center, built on the street line, almost after the manner of foreign farm villages. The English tendency toward exclusiveness put the lawn in the rear of the house; German thrift induced the use of the back lot as a truck garden. In many cases outlying "acre lands" were owned by the principal citizens for pasture purposes.

With the increase of population and encroachment of business upon the residence section of the city, the grandfathers of the present generation were compelled to establish new homes. Aforetime it was common for people of means, and of business and professional eminence, to have their dwellings and stores or offices under the same roof. It will easily be remembered when lawyers like Col. Reah Frazer and Judge Patterson had their homes and offices together, on West King street; Mr. Stevens and Mr. Dickey, on South Queen; Mr. Franklin and Mr. Champneys, on East King; and of the merchant princes of their day, Steinman, Hager, Russell, Kieffer, Deaner, Bair, Heinitsh, the Wentzes, Demuths, Evans, Long and others lived in the rear and upper floors of their business establishments; while older bank cashiers, like Col. Peiper, of the Lancaster County, and Mr. Brown, of the Farmers, kept close to their ledgers and vaults. The proprietors of hotels were not only in, but of, their hosteleries—the dining-room and dormitories, stable and bar being “personally conducted” by them and their families. For obvious reasons local physicians have adhered to the old usage.

An Early Mansion.

If I have led you by “a long, long road” to my subject, it is not because the strains of that popular ditty are in the air, but because the Shippen house illustrated, in unusual combination, our local history, its social and professional phases, its architecture, and the frequent changes of property ownership.

When the Hamiltons laid out their lots, the eligible center for residences was about the location of the Shippen house. Down around Hazel Swamp and Hickory Tavern—now the business center—was not considered so favorable. When the family who had control of these lots were spending more money in England than they were making in Lancaster, they reproached Jasper Yeates, their land agent, because their returns were not more frequent and copious. He retorted that so long as they rated their holdings at exorbitant prices they could not expect him to compete with cheaper offers to thrifty and industrious workmen settlers made by Adams, Bethel and others who were laying out villages, before the municipal consolidation, in the southern part of the city, traversed by streets still diagonal with the main avenues of Lancaster borough. This policy led to a somewhat tardy development, so that lots No. 1 and immediately following, on the Hamilton plan, beginning at the southwest corner of Lime and Orange, were not improved until about 1854, when A. W. Russell engaged in what was then a large building operation. Some of our older folk recall when the ground on which the Kline house stands was used by John Wise, the aeronaut, to exhibit and invite patronage for a captive balloon tied on that lot.

William Penn, proprietor and founder of the Commonwealth, was the first person, responsive to organized society, who owned the Shippen house lot; and the Hamiltons, founders of Lancaster, were acquiring title to it and plotting this section just about the time Washington was born. When James Hamilton made title to Thos. Cookson, in 1750, he conveyed the exact dimensions and area which comprised it when sold to the Shippen School and before any grant to the Young Women's Christian Association. Its integrity was never disturbed in the one hundred and sixty intervening years—either by enlargement or diminution. That Thomas Cookson, like many of the foremost men of old Lancaster, came from England. He was a justice of the peace, register and surveyor and an early member of St. James', where his memorial tombstone is yet to be read of all men in the robing room. The monument to Edward Shippen is in the churchyard, behind the chancel, but the inscription upon it is illegible.

Cookson's widow's second husband, George Stevenson, laid out York and Carlisle, which, like most good places, west of us, are step-children of Lancaster. Cookson's one daughter dying in her minority, two-thirds of his estate in this and other extensive properties went to his daughter Hannah, who had married Joseph Galloway, of Maryland. Partition proceedings vested the title in her and her husband. She died childless and Galloway got it first for life, as her surviving husband, and then the whole estate by purchase from Cookson's surviving nieces and heirs in England.

The price paid for the fee in 1768 was £2,500, sterling, from which I infer that the terms of Hamilton's grant to Cookson had been complied with, viz., "making, erecting, building and finishing upon the said two lots of ground two substantial dwelling-houses of the dimensions of twenty feet square, each with a good chimney of brick or stone, to be laid in or built with lime and sand."

Galloway, who owned the property for nearly ten years, probably never resided here. His fine old house, known as "Tulip Hill," at West River, Anne Arundel county, Maryland, is still standing, and has remained in the hands of the Galloway family for two centuries. A son of his half-brother was Joseph Galloway, Jr., therefore a nephew of Joseph, or Anne Arundel. Edward Shippen was a connection by marriage with both of them.

This Tory Joseph Galloway, Jr., was a noted man of that day. Born in Maryland, early removed to Philadelphia to practice law, he became Speaker of the Pennsylvania Assembly, and a member of the First Congress. Like Franklin, he advocated a royal government for the colony; but, unlike him, he abandoned the Whig cause, became a zealous Tory, wore the British uniform, and from 1778 to 1808 dwelt in England with his motherless daughter. He was a ready writer, a conspicuous pamphleteer, an unsparing critic of Sir William Howe. His writings, and especially his testimony before the House of Commons on the conduct of the war in America, are standard authorities for the historians in both countries of that eventful period in our history. He has been styled "the giant and corypheus of the Loyalist pamphleteers." Lecky quotes him; Trevelyan praises him highly and relies on his judgment; and in the bibliography appended to Moses Coit Tyler's "Literary History of the American Revolution" he appears with twenty-two titles. His scheme to avert the war with England was pronounced perfect by Edward Rutledge; it failed by the narrow vote of one colony.

The next and very distinguished owner of the property was Jasper Yeates, lawyer and Judge, for a long period probably the foremost citizen of the town. His name is linked with all our city's history of the later Eighteenth and early Nineteenth century, and is now associated with a famous local boys' school. Saran Burd, wife of Jasper Yeates, was the daughter of James Burd and his wife, Sarah Shippen, who was the daughter of Edward Shippen, of "Lancaster." Hence the Yeates, Conyngham, Burd and kindred families. By the marriage of their daughter, Mary Shippen Burd, with Peter Grubb, "Shippen of Lancaster" became the progenitor of unnumbered Bates and Grubbs and Buckleys and Parkers, even to the third and fourth generation of ironmongers and iron-masters. Both Edward Shippen's and Judge

Yeates' lineal descendants still have representation at the Lancaster Bar in the person of Redmond Conynghom, Esq., Counsellor and Referee in Bankruptcy. Judge Yeates owned this corner for less than two months—he never occupied it, and, likely, was only the medium through which it passed in 1779 to his wife's mother's brother, Edward Shippen, Jr., of Philadelphia, for £3,030—thirty more than Yeates paid for it. The new purchaser was the first of the family name to acquire title to the property. But none associated with it has left deeper or more enduring impress on the early history of Lancaster and this house.

We can trace the Edward Shippens back to England, the first born there in 1639; the next of the name, in Boston, in 1674, died in infancy. Another, born 1678, died in Philadelphia in 1714; He was Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania as early as 1699, and the first Mayor of Philadelphia. He was President of the Council that governed the Province in 1703-4; one of Penn's "keepers of the Great Seal," who, with Thomas Story, his son-in-law, and Griffith Owen, signed and sealed the early deeds for Lancaster county lands. They are good examples of penmanship, as it is not taught in our later day schools—for boys.

Driven from Boston by persecution of the Quakers, Edward Shippen's third marriage later separated him from the Society of Friends in Philadelphia. His splendid house and home were celebrated throughout all the Colonies. Though located as far down town as South and Broad streets, his orchard was "great and famous," a "herd of tranquil deer reposed on his lawn; tulips, carnations and roses grew in wild profusion in his fields, his daughters went to the assemblies in full dress on horseback, and their visiting cards, after the universal fashion of the day, were written on the face of imported playing cards. He had "the biggest person, the biggest house and the biggest coach"—and of such are the Kingdom of Heaven in Philadelphia even to this day.

Joseph Shippen was his brother, and it was his son, Edward IV., born in Boston in 1703, who spent most of his public life here, and died in Lancaster in 1781; Edward V., or Junior, who owned this property, was born in Philadelphia in 1729, and died there in 1806.

His father, Edward IV., had been a merchant, farmer, Councilman and Mayor of Philadelphia, before he became Prothonotary, Recorder and Register in Lancaster county, which places he held variously from 1745 until after the Declaration of Independence. It was he, I assume—and who knows but, as a tenant of these very premises, sitting out on this fragrant lawn—that balmy Sunday afternoon, July 26, 1778, whom Christopher Marshall greeted on his way home from church. Remembering that Marshall lived only a few doors up East Orange street, you will bear with me to hear this brief but delicious extract from his famous diary:

"Sunday, July 26, 1778. Fine Sunshine; clear, pleasant morning. I arose past seven; wind eastwardly. I took my walk in (the) orchard and observed the little concerns of our rural plantation. A general stillness now from the noise of drums, fires, etc. The little birds, with their mates, chirping from tree to tree; the fruits and vegetables; plenty and gay; the harvest got in, having been blest with fine crop of grass and grain, and fine weather. Thus has kind heaven blessed and (is) blessing us! Oh! saith my soul, that a universal hymn of praise and thanksgiving may arise and spread in and over our soul to our great and blessed Benefactor! Amen. In (the)afternoon I went to the Dutch Presbyterian Meeting house, where a suitable and good discourse was delivered on this text, Corinthians, II., Chap. 4:17, by one — Fifer, minister of the Church of England living at Frederickstown or Fredericksburg, I did not learn (which). Returned with Ed. Shippen, who pressed me to stop at his house, and drank (a) glass of beer of his own brewing....After drinking tea, past seven, took (a) walk to Robert Taggart's, from there to the above mentioned meeting-house, where the aforesaid parson preached to (a) large collection of people on this text, Eccles. 12:1, which held till past nine."

A morning walk, a chorus of birds, a song of praise, a little beer, a little tea, two sermons in one afternoon! Those old forebears of ours, after all, were not a half bad lot. Lancaster won't be Lancaster any more when it fails to mingle good cheer with sound religion, and to appreciate that good living is a real part of the better life.

A Pioneer Presbyterian.

It was this same Edward Shippen —the fourth, remember—who, as chief burgess of the town, was called out of church that bloody Sunday of the blessed Christmas-tide, 1763, when the sudden foray of the Paxton boys and their massacre of the Conestoga

Indians on the site of the Fulton Opera House disturbed the worshipping congregations of Lancaster's church people and stained our soil with a tragedy that has never had a local parallel. Though the victims found sepulture on East Chestnut street, near Lime, it was described as a location "not far from the town."

Be it noted that when John Woodhull came here as the first pastor of the Presbyterian Church—and when it had no mansard-roofed manse in sight—E. Shippen, Esq., was "one of the leading men among the Presbyterians," and when George Whitfield visited America in 1754 the Shippens were his staunchest friends. When Lancaster—then, as now, generous to every worthy appeal—raised a fund "for the distresses of the poor inhabitants of Boston," Edw. Shippen was in the chair, and was entrusted with the forwarding of the money.

His son, the younger Edward, was a lawyer of mildly Tory proclivities during the Revolution. When he forbade his daughters attending the famous British meschianza, it was due to a "feeling of shame at the indelicacy of the costume" expected, rather than to any patriotic sentiment. It was his daughter, Peggy, who became Benedict Arnold's second wife; and though she no doubt often visited her grandparents in Lancaster, her father bought this house most likely as a home for his father—soon after her betrothal to Arnold, but two months before her marriage. He owned it when her husband's treason shocked and stirred the Revolutionary cause. The one bright spot in that sickening and tragic story is Arnold's perfect loyalty to her even to death; and Lecky in his history says, "There is something inexpressibly touching in the tender affection and undeviating admiration for her husband which she retained through all the vicissitudes of his dark and troubled life."

Was Peggy Shippen Here?

It requires a vivid imagination to associate Peggy Shippen with the ghostly memories of this house and grounds—and the fact that her father sold it the next year after his father's death confirms the impression that it was bought as a home for him. But is it not pardonable to momentarily indulge the fancy that if Arnold and his bride had come up here to nurse the wound he felt when Congress ordered his courtmartial, the week before his wedding—if they had drunk tea with Christopher Marshall for a week or two of respite from military and political intrigue, and had for a short season looked at and listened to "the little birds with their mates chirping from tree to tree" on these grounds, and had watched the magnolias unfold their rich and velvety purple to the balmy air of early spring, and marked "the patient stars" "climb the midnight sky" as they glittered through the dark pines that stood just back of the rearmost kitchen, and maybe heard a sermon or two at the "Dutch Presbyterian Church," things might have gone differently—poor Andre would have been spared from the gibbet and Arnold from everlasting disgrace.

That the people of the Commonwealth harbored no resentment against Shippen for his son-in-law's crime appears from the fact that he was Chief Justice of the State for more than six years preceding his death.

He studied law at the Inns of Court in London, and prepared with his own hand the first "common recovery" ever suffered in Pennsylvania. It was to his pen we owe the first law reports published in this State. He had been an Admiralty and Common Pleas Judge in Philadelphia, and an associate on the High Court of Errors and Appeals. He pacified the tumultuous popular assemblage gathered at Lancaster in April 1756, to resent and avenge the Indian massacres to the west of us.

After his father died he sold this place to his brother, Joseph, of Kennett Square, who kept it from 1782 until his death, February 11, 1810. His wife, who was one of the Maryland Galloways, died in 1801, and her husband's executors sold it for 1,100 pounds in 1810 to Edward Shippen Burd, a grandson, who at once transferred it to a son, Robert Shippen. He held the place for seventeen years, when it passed to Hon. Walter Franklin, for the consideration of $2,500.

Poet and Judge.

Joseph Shippen was a man of no mean distinction. He had served as a trooper in the expedition that captured Fort Duquesne. He cultivated himself by European travel and study. He recruited his health in rural pursuits about Kennett, and was appointed justice of Lancaster county in 1786. He was a scholar and a poet—in a day when Lancaster county poets were ever rarer than now. He was a patron of Benjamin West and quite a gallant. As his second wife died in 1801, and his gravestone in St. James records that he was not buried until 1810, I cannot understand why he did not wed a third—unless the example of his ancestor deterred him with the fear of being put out of meeting.

An advertisement of the Shippen

THE SHIPPEN HOUSE--REAR VIEW

property in the Lancaster "Journal" of April 28, 1810, describes it as "that large two-story brick house and lot of ground on the north side of Orange street, in the borough of Lancaster, late the property of Joseph Shippen, Esq., deceased. The lot is 61 feet 7 inches and a half front on Orange street, and 245 deep, and has the privilege of an eight-foot alley on the west. The house contains four rooms besides a kitchen on the first floor and five on the second floor. Also a handsome building lot adjoining the above on the east, measuring 34 feet in front of Orange street, and 245 on Lime street. This lot has the privilege of an eight-foot alley, which is to be in common between this and the house lot." It was sold as an entirety, and comprised what, when torn down, were the halls, stairways and east side of the house. The traditional associations of the house with the legal profession and with owners of high social station were maintained. Judge Franklin had been Attorney General of the Commonwealth, and was then President Judge of the Second Judicial District, including not only Lancaster, but also, for part of his term, York, Dauphin, Cumberland and Lebanon—a district now comprising nine Judges. Upon his death the property, still intact, was devised to his widow, Mrs. Anne Franklin, who continued in possession of it until her death, and it was sold by her executors, in 1853, to Emanuel C. Reigart, for $7,910. The names attached to his deed, of Judge Franklin's two sons, the late Hon. Thomas E. and Col. Emlen Franklin, and his son-in-law, Dr. John L. Atlee, first, will readily suggest to my patient hearers, without extended suggestion, the illustrious company of Lancastrians whose ancestral associations extend over the twenty-six years of Franklin ownership and occupation.

The Reigart Regime.

The next change in title made it the property of another leading lawyer and the home of a conspicuous family. Emanuel C. Reigart, of notable local and patriotic lineage, from the time of his admission to the Bar, in 1822, to his death, in 1869, after twenty-one years retirement from professional activity, was a leading citizen of Lancaster, and of the Commonwealth, distinguished for his learning, benevolence, civic spirit and social excellences. To his numerous descendants this roof tree was a memorable shrine. Mr. Reigart made very considerable alterations and extensions to the house. There is a current belief—which I have no right, and certainly no disposition to disturb—that the east side of the house remained a part of the first pre-Revolutionary structure erected on the grounds. The memory of living man or woman runneth not to the contrary. The west wing and the back buildings were built by Mr. Reigart. The rear kitchen was originally a separate building connected by a gallery; it was joined in the Reigart improvements. The front door in the center of the building, and the front to the east of the door, containing two windows, were undoubtedly the old part of the house, and there may have been some small part of a building to the west of this, but this was torn down by Mr. Reigart. He had an office in the front room to the west, and it formerly had a door entering from the front porch into the west room, this door being later replaced by one window. After Mr. Reigart's changes there were no material alterations in the general lines of the building, and it remained one of the most attractive and generally admired of Lancaster's many beautiful homes.

During his ownership of the place Mr. Reigart made it the seat of gracious hospitality. When his daughter, the ever-young Mrs. Wm. P. Brinton—long live her ladyship—was married in these parlors, James Buchanan, her father's steadfast friend, then just chosen President of the United States, led her from the altar to the marriage feast. Indeed, three daughters of this household were married here within a year; and Mr. Reigart used to say, three weddings in one year, like Franklin said of three removals, were as bad as a fire.

The Schroder Ownership.

Mr. Reigart's executors sold the property in 1870 to the late Francis Schroder for $19,500 and Mrs. Schroder parted with it to the Shippen School in 1905. Many witnesses here can attest that, during the Schroder proprietorship, the longest in its history, it lost nothing of its repute as the home of refined culture and a center of social pre-eminence. One of the pleasantest recollections of the famous Polish actress, Countess Modjeska, was of her entertainment here as the guests of the Schroder homestead. It ceased, with the withdrawal from it of Mrs. Schroder, to be the private residence of a single family, after a century and a half of rich historical associations such as have attached to no other single property in the town. The last child born under its roof was Dorothy Hooper Schroder, now Mrs. James R. Locher.

For a time after the death of Mr. Schroder the house remained vacant and the property was for sale. A number of prominent citizens have since regretted they did not embrace the opportunity to continue this homestead in private hands. The late Senator Quay, who had already acquired considerable rural real estate between Lancaster and Columbia, was strongly inclined to buy the Shippen homestead.* Finally, on the first of February, 1905, through the medium of the Peoples Trust Company, acting as trustee, the property was sold to a number of gentlemen representing what was then the Lancaster College, a women's institution, subsequently merged with and enlarged into the Shippen School for Girls. The consideration in this transaction was $25,000, and, on December 24, 1909, the title lodged in the Shippen School for Girls. On July 2, 1912, that institution, for the consideration of $30,000, sold the Orange street front and 175 feet in depth on Lime street to the Trustees of the Young Women's Christian Association, reserving for the school itself the rear of the lot, facing on Marion street, on which its own institution is now built. Thus for the first time since the original grant the property was divided. The as-

*Senator Quay wrote me from San Lucie, Florida, January 28, 1901, as follows (He subsequently changed his mind about the purchase):

"I want the Schroder property, but I want to know what I am getting, and would like to have a description of the house and grounds. How many rooms has the house? What is the capacity of the grounds? I suspect I would have to spend $5,000 for a stable for my white elephant—my library—and thirty-five is as much as I would like to put in. So you ought to get it for thirty to help me."

LONE LARCH—"UNCHANGING AS THE DAYS GO BY"

sociation, which has torn down the old house and is about to erect thereon a modern structure, first occupied the Bechtold property, on the northeast corner of West Orange and Charlotte street, in 1893: then moved to temporary rooms in the old Aurora House, and finally bought, and for a period used for its purposes, the Isaac Diller (Muhlenburg) mansion, at No. 19 South Queen street. This latter property it sold for $18,000 on the first of July, 1912, and, with the purchase money thus acquired and gifts from various friends, the association was enabled to pay in full for its new purchase. On May 19, 1914, under its present energetic, generous and successful management it started a popular campaign to raise $100,000, for the purposes of a new building, within a week. Begun under most discouraging circumstances and shortly after large demands had been made upon the generosity of the good people of Lancaster, the effort seemed doomed to failure, but it was carried through successfully and subscriptions for the required amount were secured May 26, 1914. The building of which it has begun the erection, to be used exclusively for its own purposes, will be of rough red brick, four stories in height and of Colonial style of architecture. It will have a frontage of Orange street of ninety feet and a depth along Lime street of one hundred and thirty-five feet, standing twenty-eight feet back from the house line on Orange street and twenty feet back from Lime street. Competitive drawings for the building were submitted by a number of architects, and the plans accepted were those of Henry Y. Shaub, whose mother had been for many years an active worker in association work.

The munificent gift from the people of Lancaster of this property was a noble tribute to the sex of the good woman who endowed the Long Asylum, for her indigent sisters, and established Long Park for all the people.

When I contemplate these splendid benefactions, and recall how recently like and even greater was the gift of Lancaster's people; likewise the large sums of money, meantime, with which they have enriched churches, religious schools and other spiritual activities, how promptly and liberally they have responded to every call of charity—and when I hear voices, alien to our soil and strange to our sentiment, decry Lancaster as a community destitute of human sympathy and devoid of Christian grace; I console myself with the sage reflection of Edmund Burke: "I do not know the method of drawing up an indictment against a whole people" But, of course, the "hitter" of "the saw dust trail" rushes in where the philosopher fears to tread.

If I have taxed your patience and mayhap "vexed your ears with a twice-told tale," I can only plead that, as one fond of this good city, and to whom nothing that concerns it is foreign, I rejoice in the illustration of stability afforded by a piece of property so central, handsome and eligible, preserving its exact outlines free from spoliation for more than a century and a half; as a lawyer, it has been a pleasure to recall the associations of this place, with the distinguished Judges and advocates whose names and families are entwined through its history; and as a member of this Society I am satisfied if in any way contribution has been made to its acquisition of local history of anything worthy to be permanently preserved.

It was the proud boast of an historic house in Virginia that none of the male sex "but a gentleman" had ever crossed its threshold; and there is a romantic incident related to prove that this tradition was maintained even when the murderous blows of a bloody civil war were given and parried at its very door, and the battle lines of hostile armies were drawn all about it. So, without odious comparisons or invidious distinctions, it may be fairly said that those who wrought the chain of title to this property, running from 1750 down to their last day, to our city's lasting credit, had "worn without abuse the grand old name of gentleman."

Nigh fifty years, boy and man, the lights from this hospitable mansion gleamed across my footsteps as they trod the paths of Lancaster, old and new. Every vestige of it will be obliterated and every line erased. In its stead will rise the proud monument of a far-reaching benevolence. But to the vision of mine elder eyes there will always come to this spot the ghostly outlines of Lancaster's pageant. On a rude bench in the shadow of the eastern gable wall the hardy frontiersman and the dusky denizen of the forest will barter beads for pelts. Here shuddering groups will tell, far into the night, the noon-day tragedy from which the reckless rangers of 1763 rode back to the glebe lands of Donegal and Paxtang, wearing at their pommels bloody trophies of their vengeance on the heathen savage. Here weary-eyed women will watch and wait for the clatter of the courier's hoofs who brings them tidings from the gloom of Valley Forge or gladsome cheer from the glories of Yorktown. Here beneath "the chirp of little birds" may Christopher Marshall drink betimes and gossip with Edward Shippen. Down these broad stairs frolicsome boys and girls madcap will gallop to the sports of the lawn. Here bewigged gallants and powdered dames shall dance the minuet, to the light of waxen tapers reflected in polished mahogany. Hence beaux of old Lancaster will attend their sweethearts to the great ball to Lafayette; here breaking hearts shall sob their grief for those who died in the trenches of the Civil War; here party plot and plan will scheme for political conquest; and from out these portals mourning cavalcades will wind their way to the silent city of the dead! And from these dim, dull echoes of the past a new and stronger generation shall catch inspiration to carry forward all the civic virtues and the social graces of a Lancaster forever old and always young!

The last meeting for the year of the Lancaster County Historical Society was held this evening, with President Steinman in the chair. There was a good attendance of members.

Bound Volumes—New York Historical Society, collections, 1912 and 1913; Pennsylvania at Culpeper, Va., from the State Library, Harrisburg; Life Insurance Report; Fire and Marine Insurance Report; Water Supply Commission, Report of 1910-11 and 1912; Adjutant General's Report; Stiegel Glass, by purchase.

Magazine and Pamphlets—Penn-Germania, October, 1914; Linden Hall Echo; International Conciliation; Thanksgiving Sermon, preached in 1779; First Teacher's Institute of Lancaster County, in 1853, from Ethan Allen Weaver; Rafinesque, from Anthony M. Hance; number of historical pamphlets, from the Wyoming Historical and Geographical Society; Bulletin of Carnegie Library Pittsburgh; Bulletin of Grand Rapids Public Library; Lancaster Directory for 1843, from E. R. Garvin; The New York Herald, from April 1865 to April 1866, from Miss Daisy Rohrer.

Christopher Neff, of Elizabethtown, was elected to membership. There were no nominations of new members.

Nomination of officers for the new year being in order, Rev. F. G. Bosser, of Mt. Joy, nominated the present incumbents, as follows: President, George Steinman; Vice Presidents, F. R. Diffenderffer, Litt.D.; W. U. Hensel, Esq.; Recording Secretary, Charles B. Hollinger; Corresponding Secretary, Miss Martha B. Clark; Treasurer, A. K. Hostetter; Librarian, Miss Lottie M. Bausman. The annual election takes place in January.

Mr. Hostetter referred to the splendid condition of the society's library, highly complimenting Miss Bausman on the large amount of work she had accomplished since she has had charge of it. The books all are in excellent condition.

Miss Bausman, talking along the same lines, spoke of the value of the society's library as was developed by the recent efforts of a representative of the Carnegie Institution in Washington to find a number of valuable records, finally locating them here.

The paper for the evening was prepared by W. U. Hensel, Esq., who took as his subject, "The Passing of an Old Landmark." It was read by B. C. Atlee, Esq. The paper was one of the best that has ever been contributed to the society and brought forth many compliments for the author. A vote of thanks was tendered to Mr. Hensel and also Mr. Atlee.
